Troops' Fire Routs Harlan Attackers; Mine Closed

'It's Them Against Us,' Guard Chief Says; Pickets Force Pit to Shut Down

By William H. Lawrence,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Harlan, Ky., May 18.—United Mine Workers pickets forced one mine to shut down today and National Guardsmen exchanged shots with union sympathizers in the first serious outbreak in the union's attempt to obtain closed-shop contracts with the Harlan Coal Operators Association.

The trouble centered at the Totz, Ky., tipple of the High Splint Coal Co., which suspended operations after 25 men swarmed down the hillsides and fired over the heads of frightened nonunion miners. Detachments of militia returned the fire and the invaders fled.

No one was believed injured.

Earlier three-quarters of the county was left temporarily without electrical energy when a Kentucky Utilities Co. power line was dynamited between Benham and Lynch, 22 miles northeast.

"It's Them Against Us"

Gen. Ellerbe Carter, commanding the 1,250 troops sent into the county by Gov. Chandler, charged that the union had broken its pledge against violence and he warned that now "it's them against us."

"It's the State of Kentucky against a bunch of bums and thugs from Lynch," he declared. "If the union cannot control these men, we will."

Gen. Carter tonight ordered the arrest of seven pickets whom he charged were responsible for disorders which resulted in the closing of a mine at Totz, Ky.

Carter also announced that picketing would not be allowed in the future at Totz. He said that if there was "any more sniping," the soldiers had orders to "spray the mountainsides with machine gun and rifle fire."

George M. Titler, district secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, denied that union members had fired on troopers at Totz, and charged that reports of the fight were put out by guard leaders to arouse sentiment for additional soldiers.

The Harlan Central Coal Co. at Totz, which had been operating since Tuesday, closed down after pickets succeeded in barring the way to nonunion miners.

Murphy Sends Agents

In Washington, meanwhile, Attorney General Murphy ordered two more Justice Department agents to come here and observe conditions in connection with the impending retrial of conspiracy charges against 55 corporations and persons accused of depriving Harlan miners of their civil rights. Two agents already are on the ground.

Murphy said that agents, representing his new civil liberties unit, "would observe any abuses, keep us informed and make recommendations later."

Also in Harlan was John L. Connor, Labor Department conciliator, who will attempt to obtain a settlement between the union and the association.

Representative Clare E. Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, announced in Washington that he would introduce a resolution for investigation of U. M. W. A. President John L. Lewis in connection with the Harlan impasse.

"Who is the head of this nation? Is it Franklin Delano Roosevelt, or is it John L. Lewis?"

William J. Cunningham, president of the association, said that the operators are adamant in their rejection of the union shop.

Cubs Emerge From Hiding for First Picture; Polar Bear Father Kept From Kadiak Hybrids

Mrs. Ramona Ursus was discharged from the zoo's maternity hospital yesterday and returned to her bear pit home with two hybrid cubs that are as cuddly as they are rare.

Snowy, the proud husband and father, welcomed with an ear-splitting roar the wife he had not seen for nearly four months and the offspring he had never seen. For the time being, however, the mother bear and cubs will be kept away from Snowy, for safety's sake.

Romona is a Kadiak brown bear. Her mate is a huge polar. This is their second litter of hybrids. Nearly full-grown are the three cross-breeds born two-and-a-half years ago. The five youngsters are the only bears in the world born of a Kadiak mother and polar father.

About three months old, the cubs are a light brown color with streaks of white across their necks. Keepers said most young bears have this white streak, which disappears as they grow older.

It's still too early to tell family resemblances but, of the three older offspring, two are images of their bulky brown mother while the third has the tapering nose and streamlined contour of his father.

While Ramona and her two young ones posed for their first pictures together yesterday Snowy looked on approvingly, disdainfully oblivious of his other mate, Marion, a polar bear like himself. She has never born him any cubs that survived.

Let Business Make Profit, Sloan Asks

Tells Monopoly Inquiry 'If We Are to Keep Present System We Must Respect It'

By Felix Cotten.

Repeal of the capital gains and undistributed profits taxes was advocated yesterday by Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of the board of the General Motors Corporation, who testified at the Monopoly Committee hearing on means for using idle dollars to create jobs.

These taxes, together with huge Treasury deficits, Sloan insisted, are major business deterrents. A balanced budget, he declared, is necessary to restore the confidence of investors and encourage business to move forward.

The head of the world's biggest automobile concern outlined his views to newspapermen after he had concluded his testimony. He told the committee that barriers to business erected by the Government should be removed.

"Ought to Respect Profit System"

He said also that the Administration could help business by lending support and encouragement to the idea of business profits.

"As long as we live under the profit system," he declared, "we ought to respect it."

There is need for greater business profits, he said, as an inducement to idle dollars to take risks. President Roosevelt has asked the committee to find ways for using "stagnant pools" of savings to create jobs for idle workers.

Sloan was reluctant to say anything which might be interpreted as criticism of the Administration. He said he did not come "to give a recipe for recovery."

He agreed, however, with most of the observations made by Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of the General Electric company, who on Wednesday told the committee that the capital gains tax should be repealed to encourage the flow of idle money into productive enterprise.

Young Favored Modification

Although Young favored modification of the undistributed profits tax by exempting earnings put back into plant construction, Sloan thought it would help business psychology to repeal it "to prove we do not think that way anymore."

The capital gains tax applies to profits in the stock market and from deals in property generally. Its repeal, Sloan declared, would "insure a maximum flexibility of the capital structure.

Sloan, like Young, was called to testify by the Securities and Exchange Commission, which is in charge of the presentation of data on the problems of savings and investment.

General Motors and General Electric are case studies in the picture which the SEC is unfolding. The commission has concluded, from its

2,500,000 of All Faiths Cheer George, Elizabeth in Montreal

Queen Elizabeth signs the Golden Visitor's Book at the City Hall in Montreal as King George looks on. They were given royal welcome in that Canadian city yesterday.

The Royal Schedule in America—Page 11.

Montreal, May 18.—This one-time Indian village that is now the metropolis of Canada gave King George VI and Queen Elizabeth a stupendous welcome today.

Again, as in Quebec, there were the vivid contrasts—the booming of cannon and the ringing of church bells, the "Hurrays!" and the "Vives!" the medieval pageanty against the background of skyscrapers.

But today it all was on a vaster scale, with a cheering, flag-waving crowd that police estimated to total 2,500,000. Montreal's population is about 1,250,000. The others came from hundreds of miles away, traveling all night in many cases and standing in line along the festooned streets for hours for one flashing glimpse of the regal yet democratic sovereigns.

The Montreal visit, which began with a 21-gun salute and a brilliant military spectacle at Park Avenue Station this morning, came to a climax tonight when the King and Queen appeared on the gorgeous balcony of the Windsor Hotel and were cheered by a crowd of 50,000.

Riding today in a maroon-colored Lincoln—yesterday it was a Chrysler, and two other makes are yet to be used—the King and the Queen traveled over a route 23 miles long.

Indians Renounce Scalping

Near Victoria Square they saw their first Indians in war dress, a band of the Iroquois whose ferocious ancestors killed thousands of the early French settlers and made martyrs and saints of several Jesuit fathers. The braves who turned out today were from the Caugnawaga reservation, 15 miles away, and wore their feathered head dresses, buckskin jackets and breeches and moccasins.

The King probably knew that these red men of 1939 were merely masquerading for him, however, for in Quebec Chief Old Big Gun, a college-bred Cree, sent an ode to him which said in part:

"We used to scalp our foes
And eat their juicy limbs
But now we've learnt the arts of peace
As taught in Christian hymns.

"We used to dance and whoop
But now that we can sing
We'll wave our bloodless tomahawks
And cry 'God Save the King!'"

In today's "royal progress" through Montreal, the famous Gros Bourdon (Great Bell) pealed a welcome to him from the Notre Dame

Strife in Holy Land

By the United Press.

Jerusalem (Friday), May 19.—A British soldier was shot to death and at least 200 persons were injured in rioting which spread over the Holy Land today with increasing fury under the cry of "betrayal!" by Jews protesting against Great Britain's new plan for Palestine.

In Jerusalem more than 150 persons, mostly Jews, were taken to hospitals during 24 hours of rifle fire, rioting, incendiarism and bombings. Automobiles were commandeered for use as ambulances. Scores of others were injured in clashes at Tel-Aviv on the Mediterranean.

Of the 150 who received hospital treatment in Jerusalem eight were reported in serious condition.

Arabs Stay Indoors

[The Arab populace, which generally welcomed the British plan, kept indoors or was diverted from main streets and Jewish districts by the police, according to International News Service.—Editor's note.]

The British soldier was killed and another soldier was wounded when a detachment of troops was fired upon by a rioting crowd in Jerusalem last evening.

Reports from throughout the country indicated that the disorders were increasing rapidly as Jews by the tens of thousands unleashed their anger against the British government's plan to set up an independent state within ten years under Arab domination.

The worst disorders were in the crooked, cobblestone streets of Jerusalem and in the new modernistic Jewish city of Tel-Aviv to the north. British Tommies manned barbed-wired barricades in the streets.

In Jerusalem, British troops and police were compelled late Thursday night to fire over the heads of Jewish crowds in an effort to suppress serious rioting.

The troops and police advanced like ancient warriors of the Holy Land's wars, carrying shields against a barrage of stones laid down by the demonstrators. Six British constables and J. A. Gerald, assistant superintendent of police, were injured by stones.

Police Use Clubs

The crowds blew up street lamps and overturned telephone booths. Ninety-six Jews were injured in Jerusalem alone when police charged them with swinging clubs. At least 3,000 youths marched through the streets tonight shouting anti-British slogans and stoning

FBI 'Likely' To Investigate D.C. Policemen

Murphy's Prediction In Court Inquiry 'Astonishes' Brown

Certain individual policemen are "likely" to be involved in the FBI investigation of conditions in District Police Court, Attorney General Frank Murphy said yesterday.

At his press conference, the Attorney General said the inquiry had not yet been completed. He did not say whether the officers in question are assigned to Police Court work or are detailed to headquarters or the precincts. There are five policemen assigned to the lower court—three of them as assistants in the Corporation Counsel's Office.

Maj. Brown Astonished

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, said he was "astonished" to learn of the Attorney General's statement.

"I know absolutely nothing about the matter," he said. "I was, however, given to understand that my department was in no way involved in the investigation. If any members of my command are being investigated by the Department of Justice it is news to me."

Murphy emphasized that police court, as a court, was not under fire.

Names Withheld

The investigation is a result of recent conferences between the Attorney General, United States Attorney Pine and J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI.

Earlier Murphy declined to say whether the inquiry was aimed at the court of Judge Hobart Newman, recently criticized in a series of stories in the Daily News.

"This is no time to mention names," Murphy said. He indicated, however, that both officials and attaches of the court were involved.

House Committee Approves Increase In Anti-Spy Funds

By Cecil B. Dickson.
International News Service Writer

Congress yesterday received two grave warnings—one from Secretary of State Hull that America's interests are being threatened to an "alarming degree" and another from FBI Director Hoover that activities of foreign spies here have increased to a startling stage.

The warnings were contained in secret testimony made public by the Appropriations Committee as it laid before the House the annual supply bill for the State, Justice and Commerce Departments for the fiscal year beginning June 30.

Responding to pleas for adequate funds to combat internal espionage and foreign activities directed against the United States, the committee approved a $121,399,120 outlay for the three departments, an increase of $26,691,315 over current expenses

Funds Increased

The State Department was allotted $18,225,200, an increase of $1,326,350, to aid it in its diplomatic activities. The Federal Bureau of Investigation was given $7,300,000, a $300,000 increase over the budget to increase its counter-espionage efficiency.

Altogether the Justice Department was allocated $52,745,320, with an increase to $1,000,000 in trust-busting funds, twice as much as formerly. The Commerce Department received $52,568,700, of which $20,000,000 will be spent for the 1940 census.

The increase in FBI funds was recommended by the committee on the basis of Hoover's testimony that 772 espionage cases are expected in the coming year, against 634 cases involving spies this year.

Largest Peacetime Budget Includes Two Dreadnoughts

Given definite word that both Japan and Great Britain are building battleships larger than the old treaty limits, the Senate yesterday passed the $773,049,151 naval appropriation bill, carrying funds for laying down two "super-dreadnaughts" of 45,000 tons each.

The funds, larger than any previous peacetime outlay for the Navy, were approved by a vote of 61 to 14. The bill now goes back to the House for action on amendments, mostly of a minor nature. Just before passage, a motion by Senator King (Democrat), Utah, to cut the total of the bill by 10 per cent, was defeated by a voice vote.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, touched off a flurry of spirited debate over the big battleships when he demanded to know if this Nation was taking the lead in a naval building race.

The floor manager of the bill, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, answered that naval officials

Senators Find Beef They Eat Is From Brazil

By International News Service.

Amid the controversy over President Roosevelt's approval of a Navy order of Argentine canned corned beef, Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, told the Senate yesterday that in its restaurant South American canned corned beef is being served.

While Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, protested against the Navy's food from abroad "when he have surpluses here," Norris had a page bring from the Senate restaurant one of the cans of corned beef in its stock. Its label indicated the beef had been packed in Brazil for an American company.

When Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, asked how it happened imported corned beef was being served, O'Mahoney explained that the dining room is controlled by the Senate Rules Committee, of which Lucas is a member.

Lucas explained the Rules Committee had not met since he became a member of it.

Roosevelt Hopes To See West's Fair

The President yesterday promised a delegation of California visitors to attend the Golden Gate Exposition in June.

The delegation consisted of Mayor Rossi of San Francisco and Mayors McCracken and Monk of Oakland and Sacramento, respectively.

Mayor Rossi quoted the President as saying he hoped to be on the West Coast in June, but in any event would probably make a visit there later in the summer.

Mystery of King's Linen Blanket Solved—Almost

The "linen blanket mystery," which had Mrs. Roosevelt in a quandary, apparently was solved yesterday by a Washington society matron.

The First Lady told the Seventy-sixth Club the other day that she had been informed that a linen blanket might be provided for the convenience of King George VI when he visits the White House, but she didn't know what a linen blanket was.

Department store buyers were quizzed, but "linen blanket" was Greek to them as well. One suggested that linen bedspread may have been meant.

The society matron who telephoned the Post yesterday laughingly explained that "linen blanket," in England, means a linen casing in which the blanket is slipped to keep it clean.

Of course, that still leaves a question as to whether the King is in the habit of using the empty casing as a covering when taking a midday nap.

Pope Revives Colorful March To Basilica

Plea for Peace Echoed in 1st Rites Of Kind Since 1846

By the Associated Press.

Rome, May 18.—The unceasing appeal of Pope Pius XII for peace echoed today when the Pontiff, as Bishop of Rome, formally took possession of his diocesan church, St. John Lateran.

As the Holy Father was borne to the balcony to give his benediction "to city and to world," the choir intoned a hymn to the Blessed Virgin in accordance with his pleas for prayers to her this month to spare the world from war.

Today's possession ceremonies were the first with medieval pomp and splendor since 1846, when Pius IX went to the Basilica at the beginning of his pontificate. In Pius IX's reign the Vatican and Italy came into conflict, when the Papal State was merged in the Italian Kingdom.

The Pontiff voluntarily, as a sign of protest, kept himself a "prisoner" in the Vatican. Succeeding Popes followed his example until the Lateran accords of 1929 ended the conflict. After the accords, Pius XI formally took over St. John Lateran—but without the traditional pageantry seen today.

Upon his advent today there were four ceremonies—in the atrium, where he received the keys of St. John Lateran; in the nave, where he venerated the Holy Sacrament and relics; in the apse, where formal possession of the Basilica was taken and cardinals kissed his slipper; and at the high altar, where he celebrated mass.

Then he was carried in his portable throne to the balcony for the final benediction.

Italian troops outside exchanged military honors with the Pope's palatine guardsmen. Bands played a hymn, the Royal March and Giovanezza, the Fascist song.

Ellender Summons Records On Married Couples in GAO

The love that has bloomed in the General Accounting Office "probably more than in other agencies" yesterday entered the one-man inquiry which Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, is making into charges of favoritism in Government service.

In an effort to determine why married couples were permitted to hold their jobs after the economy law of 1933 while "individual heads of families" were retired, Senator Ellender asked the G. A. O. for the work records of several "of your husbands and wives."

W. W. Richardson, G. A. O. personnel officer, said he would provide the records, but insisted they would not show anything.

"They are office romances and there is nothing that can be done about them. They happen everywhere," he said repeatedly as the Louisiaman called off the names of married couples and their joint salaries. "They had their jobs when they married and still have them."

Richardson declared workers were severed from their jobs in 1933 on the basis of the work they were doing and the need for it, rather than on a strict personal need basis. He pointed out that Comptroller General McCarl interpreted the law as meaning either persons with 30 years of service could be retired on pensions or one-half of a married couple be discharged. When Attorney General Cummings ruled husbands and wives must be separated first, the G. A. O. made numerous reinstatements, he said.

James C. Bibbs, who entered the Government service in 1903 and is now with the Interior Department, testified that he did not care to return to G. A. O. because he "thought

Giant Monopoly Keeps Milk Price Up Here, Schulte Charges

By James D. Secrest.

Charges that "powerful influences" are at work to hinder the District milk investigation and that a "giant monopoly" operates here to keep up the price of milk to the consumer were made on the House floor late yesterday by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana.

Schulte, a member of the subcommittee conducting the inquiry, asserted that "a Chinese wall" had been built up by producers and health department officials to shut out Western dairy producers.

He ridiculed the raid made March 4 on the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy by police because of the publicity given to it and pointed out that the cream, when tested, proved to be of high quality. Although only a misdemeanor had been charged, he said, seven persons were taken to seven different precinct stations.

Replying to a question from Representative Hull (Progressive), of Wisconsin, Schulte said the subcommittee shortly will disclose the "high salaries" paid to local dairy officials.

Some additional light was thrown on the mysterious pigeon racing that has bobbed up from time to time in the milk investigation just before the House sub-committee conducting the inquiry recessed for the week-end.

Charles C. Staub, Health Department inspector, was questioned about the reports that health inspectors were promoting pigeon races for some unexplained reason.

After Staub stated that all he knew was what he had read in the papers, Dr. Reid B. Ashworth, chief

FOUR VERSIONS OF A STORY

The story:

Some of Queen Elizabeth's ladies-in-waiting sought to learn diplomatically from the White House whether they (and the Queen) would need hot-water bottles to keep their beds (and their feet) warm at night, and whether there'd be enough hot water, during their visit in June . . . Mrs. Roosevelt has assured them (through diplomatic channels) that June wouldn't be chilly here, and that there's plenty of hot running water at the White House. Warm tootsies are guaranteed.

Lady-in-Waiting . . . cold feet?

As Walter Lippmann might tell it:

"Beneath the deceptively calm surface of Anglo-American relations flows a strong current of distrust . . . Never has this been more pointedly illustrated than by the diplomatic negotiations surrounding the impending visit of Their Majesties. There is a dubiety on the one hand, a guarded tentativeness on the other, which might be freighted with its own risible potentialities were it not also fretted with ominous portents.

* * * *

"Between the London and the Washington zeitgeist there is a wider gulf than that predicated merely on divergent concepts of plumbing. The putative bond of a common language has been stretched so far that it affords at best only a tenuous bridge across the Atlantic.

"—our cousins think of everything"

"The same Englishman who scoffs at American preoccupation with the splendors of the bathroom is, by a paradox typically British, disconsolate unless an American host provides for his reception a well-warmed brick." And so on for 1,000 elegant words.

* * * *

As Dorothy Thompson might relate it:

"Neville Chamberlain, who is still an appeaser at heart, took his umbrella to Munich. Now Their Majesties apparently are determined to repeat his blunder by bringing their hot-water bottles to America. Where, oh where, is the spirit of Locarno?

* * * *

"When Richard the Lion-Hearted rode away on the Crusades he carried no umbrella, but a lance. Gen. Wolfe stormed the heights of Quebec without benefit of footwarmers. It is not recorded that Clive wore earmuffs when he conquered India. Nurse Cavell carried no smelling salts.

* * * *

"Perhaps it were better for the ladies-in-waiting and gentlemen-in-waiting to shiver the whole night through at the White House, or to sleep in wool socks as Americans do at polite British house parties, and perchance to dream fitfully of Abraham Lincoln, and arise in the morning with a clear, heartening vision of a better world." And so on to the end of the column.

"—King and Queen in America?"

As Pegler might recount the anecdote:

"Egad, merrie gentlemen, are the royal dogs to be imperiled with goose pimples when the King and Queen sashay into the Roosevelts' $29,000,000 bungalow to visit their royal cousins? Not by my halidom, varlets, shall George and Liz suffer one majestic chilblain, even if we must call out the American Navy, the WPA, the CCC, the Bituminous Coal Commission and the National Emergency Council.

* * * *

"We're already 40 billions in the hole; the budget is as unbalanced as Tony Galento after Joe Louis socks him in the kischkes. Our grandchildren will be paying for the jam session of the last six years of the slap-happy jitterbug regime. Let's spend another $2.75 for an electric pad. If necessary the TVA can string a few million dollars worth of wire from Norris dam direct to the foot of the Lincoln bed. We can tax our great-great-grandchildren.

* * * *

"There may have been cold feet at Munich, and maybe Danzig is to be served en gelee to Hitler. But there must be no kingly cold feet at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. . . . Let Tommy the Cork draft a law. Telephone Henry the Morgue to see if there's another farthing in the till. Send out an SOS to all the ivory towers in all the academic groves. Call in Amlie, John L. Lewis, Maury Maverick and Ray Moley. Bring back Rex Tugwell from exile. Maybe Madame Perkins can heat a kettle of water. The purple blood of George III must be kept flowing through the farthest-flung British extremity."

And so on to the bottom of the page.

Senate Group Approves Rail Reorganization

Bill's Nature Restricts Right to B. & O. And Lehigh Valley

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday approved the House-passed voluntary rail reorganization bill after narrowly restricting debt-adjustment permission to only two railroads—the Baltimore & Ohio and the Lehigh Valley.

The result was a personal victory for Daniel Willard, 78-year-old president of the Baltimore & Ohio, who last week appealed for the legislation and said it would be a "personal disgrace" if his road should be forced into bankruptcy.

As approved by the Senate committee, the revised bill specifically bars roads in receivership from its voluntary reorganization provisions and eliminates the five-year permission given by the House for financially harassed roads to effect postponement of their debts.

Method of Limitation

Limitation of the measure to the two roads was accomplished by applying its provisions only to carriers who received Interstate Commerce Commission approval of their security plans by April 1 of this year. The B. & O. and the Lehigh Valley alone qualify.

Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, who had opposed the original House bill as "setting up an umbrella" for all roads in financial difficulties, said he thought those that already have gone to the trouble and expense of preliminary I. C. C. procedure should be permitted to go ahead.

If the legislation is approved, the two roads would be permitted to proceed with debt adjustment plans which provide for postponement of maturity dates, through consent of 75 per cent of their creditors, without resort to bankruptcy proceedings. A three-judge Federal court would hold hearings in each case and pass on the fairness of the plans.

Several procedural restrictions were adopted which committeemen said safeguard security holders in case the courts decide the plans approved by the I. C. C. must be modified. The courts would be required to examine into fees and expenses of the roads and propriety of means used to effectuate the plan. No debt-adjustment plan could be approved unless voting rights were found compatible with interests of creditors, stockholders and "public policy."

Predicts Rail Recovery

The white-haired Willard, 30 years at the head of the B. & O., last week predicted the railroads will "come out of this depression" in better shape, and voiced confidence that his road will be able to pay its present fixed charges and resume dividends "if business gets on a little better basis."

Meanwhile Wheeler formally reported to the Senate a bill setting up a special railroad reorganization court approved by the committee last week. The proposed five-man court would pass upon plans of capital adjustment and capital reorganization undertaken by railroads under the bankruptcy laws. This bill would revise and expedite present reorganization procedure and strengthen I. C. C. standards.

Already on the Senate calendar and slated for early consideration is Wheeler's omnibus transportation bill, codifying the interstate commerce act, setting up a temporary national transportation board and bringing water carriers under I. C. C. jurisdiction.

Roosevelt Lauds Links of Airlines Between Americas

President Roosevelt paid tribute yesterday to the work of the air transport between the United States and the west coast of South America in developing friendly intercourse. He sent air mail letters to the Presidents of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Chile on the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the service.

The regular air transport service was inaugurated in 1929 by the Pan American-Grace Airways.

In his letter to President Aurelio Mosquera Narvaez of Ecuador, President Roosevelt said:

"Through aviation, the republics of the North and of the South are being brought ever closer to one another in friendly intercourse, and it is my hope that in the developments of the future, the cordial co-operation between the peoples of Ecuador and those of the United States may constantly be strengthened and rendered mutually more beneficial."

Public's Fear of European War This Year Wanes; Only 32% Think It Will Break Out

New York, May 18.—American public apprehension over the possibility of war in Europe this year has decreased sharply during the last six weeks, coinciding with a lessened tension abroad, according to the results of a national survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

Whereas slightly more than half of American voters said last April that they believed war would break out in Europe this year, the number believing this today has dropped to approximately one-third. During the period since early April the British government has made alliances with several European countries in an attempt to thwart Hitler, press dispatches from Berlin have reported a softened tone in Nazi official circles, and Mussolini has declared that war is "unnecessary."

The Institute has conducted four separate surveys in the last two years to test American apprehension of war. Each survey asked the same question:

"Do you believe there will be a war between any of the big European countries this year?"

The trend of sentiment follows:

	Yes	No.
January, 1937	16%	84%
January, 1939	44	56
April	51	49
Today	32	68

As the results show, there was a gradual increase in war fear between January, 1937, and January, 1939, the latter date being after the peace of Munich. When, several months later, Hitler seized the rest of Czecho-Slavakia, apprehension of war rose again, and began to decline only in recent weeks.

Reasons for the change in sentiment are shown by an analysis of comments made by voters in explaining their attitude. The chief reason is a belief that the "powers are bluffing," particularly Germany and Italy. Second is that "none of the countries have enough money to fight," or as one voter put it "there won't be a war because this time the United States isn't putting up the money."

The minority who do feel there will be a war declare that the tension has gone so far they do not see how war can be avoided, and that "Hitler is unpredictable." Their general attitude is that any relaxation of tension at the present time is merely a lull before the storm.

The belief that war will not come this year shows little variation by geographical sections, or by ages. There is a difference, however, among men and women. Whereas only 29 per cent of men voters in the survey fear that war will break out this year, 36 per cent of women voters fear this.

Frank to Speed Revamping of Public Utilities

Reveals Plans After Election to Head Securities Commission

Jerome Frank, who yesterday became chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, intends to speed up revamping of public utility properties under the "death sentence" clause to avoid any disturbance to business arising from uncertainty.

He also plans to finish the job of reorganizing the New York Stock Exchange in line with recommendations made in the report on the Richard Whitney investigation.

Meanwhile, attempts by "some of the old private club boys" to recapture control of the exchange will be vigorously resisted, he said at a press conference after the five-man commission had elected him chairman by a three-to-two vote.

Henderson Sworn

This occurred at a commission meeting after Leon Henderson had been sworn in as a commission member. Henderson and former Representative Edward C. Eicher voted for Frank, while George C. Mathews and Robert E. Healy, Republican members, voted against him.

In consequence, Frank was obliged to cast the deciding vote in his favor. Nevertheless, it was recalled that the commission chairman, in practice, actually is designated by the President. The three Democratic members, therefore, simply were carrying out a White House mandate.

Following Frank's election, Healy who presided at the commission meeting, said:

"So far as I am concerned, there is no aftermath to this thing. The incident is closed, and there is no personal bitterness or hard feeling."

Mathews Silent

Mathews refused to comment.

Why Mathews and Healy were opposed to Frank for chairman never has been revealed.

"To my mind," Frank said, "one of the greatest misfortunes which befall the American investor would be to lose the gains which have been made possible by the revised attitude of the stock exchange under new management."

Saying the SEC was "in the true sense a conservative institution," Frank declared its function was to make the profit system work. To do this, he said, it is necessary to have the confidence of the "great middle class" of investors.

Ludlow Criticizes Roosevelt's Stand Against War Vote

By International News Service.

Representative Ludlow (Democrat), Indiana, sponsor of the original war referendum resolution, sharply criticized President Roosevelt, before a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing yesterday, for the executive's opposition to a referendum before any declaration of war by this country.

Ludlow attacked the Administration argument against the war referendum measure—that it would hinder American foreign policy.

"If a President now has such power over Congress that he can prevent a measure from ever being enacted, what chance would there be to avert war if some future dictatorial President should decide to force a declaration of war?" Ludlow asked.

Senate confirmation of William M. Leiserson, of Ohio, chairman of the National Mediation Board, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board, was held up yesterday by Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio.

SEN. TAFT

When Leiserson's name was reached on the executive calendar in the Senate, Taft explained that he "wanted to make a few remarks" on the nomination and would be ready to talk today.

Leiserson was nominated by President Roosevelt to succeed Donald W. Smith, against whose reappointment the American Federation of Labor protested with claims he has shown a bias in favor of the C. I. O.

An hour after giving a second blood transfusion to his 10-year-old son, Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, returned to work at the Capitol yesterday. The son, Connor Patman, is ill with rheumatic fever.

This decision, "Norris said in a letter to labor's Nonpartisan League, "if allowed to stand, means the destruction . . . of organized labor."

'Kiss-of-Death' Widow Seized By G-Men

Group Arraignments Of Poison Suspects To Begin Tuesday

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 18.—A long-sought widow police know as "Rose of Death" was jerked to the center of the stage tonight in Philadelphia's stranger-than-fiction drama of wholesale murder for insurance.

In the wings, police held more than 20 additional suspects and an alleged extortioner. Prosecutors drew up cases against all and announced that group arraignments would begin next Tuesday, with the first trial a week later. They expected several guilty pleas.

The cast of characters in this bizarre real-life performance was enlarged with the arrest in New York of Rose Carina, 45, whom investigators nick-named the "death-kiss woman" in the months they sought here.

Barber Also Seized

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation roused the household of Antonio Mastro, Greenwich Village barber, shortly after dawn today and took Mrs. Carina and Mastro into custody. Both were brought to Philadelphia.

Mastro was booked as a material witness by Federal agents, but a warrant issued by Judge Harry S. McDevitt charged him with aiding Mrs. Carina to escape from a Lakewood, N. J., hideout after she had been named in a murder warrant.

Mrs. Carina, her 11-year-old daughter, Rita, and Mastro were brought to the city by automobile. Shortly after their arrival Federal agents turned them over to city police. The girl was placed in the care of a Catholic welfare home.

Had Five Husbands

Mrs. Carina is charged specifically with the poison death of Pietro Stea, a grocer, who was her common-law husband. She had five husbands, the first when she was 19. Three died under what detectives say were suspicious circumstances.

Originally named as a ringleader who lured men to death for dollars, Mrs. Carina now is described by Assistant Attorney Vincent P. McDevitt as "just a cog in the wheels" of the plot that spread over at least four Eastern Seaboard States and took 50 to 100 lives.

While FBI agents hustled her to Philadelphia, Police Captain James A. Kelly accused four persons of killing John Woloshyn, a baker, for insurance. He named Caesar Valenti, Herman Petrillo, Woloshyn's widow and "an unknown person."

Clubbed, Run Down By Car

Valenti, a huge Italian immigrant, was blamed for clubbing the baker "so that a large part of his head was taken off." Woloshyn then was run over by an automobile "driven by an unknown person accompanied by Herman Petrillo," the captain told the magistrate.

Held on a murder charge, Valenti recently was brought here from Rickers Island Penitentiary, New York, where he faced deportation.

Woloshyn's widow was held without bail as an accessory in her husband's death after Kelly testified he had cancelled checks and "other documentary evidence." He had said previously that she collected $10,600 on a double-indemnity policy. Her husband's death in January, 1938, was recorded then as an unsolved "accident."

Petrillo, also named by Kelly in this death, was convicted of first-degree murder in the poison death of another man and faces the electric chair. Prosecutor McDevitt indicated at the Woloshyn hearing that much of his information against murder ring defendants came from disclosures Petrillo made after the trial.

Arrest at Cleveland

"Herman Petrillo tried to kid us for three months," he remarked. "Now that he's started talking, we couldn't stop him if we wanted to."

The arrest of the "death-kiss" woman ended a nation-wide manhunt which the FBI began Tuesday night. Federal officers also have in custody Dominic Rodio, 51, arrested by Clevalnd police early yesterday. He waived a hearing in Cleveland today on a charge that he unlawfully fled to avoid appearing as a material witness to the drowning of Joseph Arena off Sea Isle City, N. J., in 1932.

Rodio, self-styled private detective, told Cleveland officers he was on a fishing trip with Arena, but denied that Arena was drowned deliberately for insurance.

Rodio was to be brought to Philadelphia tomorrow.

Capital Frozen By Gains Tax, Says Dawes

80 Billion Income Impossible Unless It Is Avoided, He Holds

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 18.—Charles G. Dawes contended tonight the capital gains tax hindered the return of prosperity and should be "repealed or drastically reduced."

Dawes, banker and former Vice President of the United States, asserted that unless such action was taken "we can never reach our desired $80,000,000,000 national income."

His views—written while some Congressmen in Washington were advocating revision of levies they regarded as deterrents to business—were set forth in a statement to Oscar G. Mayer, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Says It Freezes Capital

"The capital gains tax makes improbable, if not impossible, the return of normal prosperity to the United States and in the interest of all cities, rich or poor, should be repealed or drastically reduced," Dawes asserted. "The devastation wrough by it in American business is not sufficiently realized."

He said one purpose of the tax was to eliminate speculators seeking quick profits in stocks, real estate and other capital goods. But "while successful in cutting down a comparatively small amount of business on the stock exchnage," he added, it had also "cut down an enormous amount of business in capital goods in the country at large" and had frozen a "stupendous amount of inactive capital" which would have gone into circulation immediately.

"For Alleged Moral Uplift"

"Wealth and purchasing power to produce prosperity must be in motion, not in static form," he wrote. "It is axiomatic that under normal conditions what we call prosperity is activity in exchanges—that is, activity in sales and purchases—and that laws which lessen the number of business exchanges tend to lessen prosperity.

"Having its origin in the idea that . . . a quick profit is to be presumed an unfair profit, the capital gains tax is a shining example of the folly of efforts to make our revenue laws agencies for alleged moral uplift."

Dawes declared England had high income taxes but stimulated business initiative, activity and energy by shunning taxes on capital gains.

Let Business Make a Profit, Sloan Tells Trust Inquiry

Says "If We Are to Keep Present System We Must Respect It"

ALFRED P. SLOAN, JR.,

inquiry, that big business in a large degree is self-sufficient so far as dependence on the capital market for money is concerned. As a result, large corporations cannot be expected, no matter what opportunities are offered, to make use of idle money.

No Outside Financing

Sloan agreed that this was true, so far as General Motors is concerned. In the 18 years of its history, he said, "there has been substantially no outside financing." The company has used its own earnings to finance needed plant expansion and modernization.

He denied, however, that the automobile industry had reached the saturation point, as Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, professor of political economy of Harvard University, suggested at the start of the present series of hearings Tuesday.

The automobile industry, Sloan declared, is geared to the national income to a large extent. That is, as national income rises, sales of automobiles will also rise. Sales will rise faster than national income, he belived, because as the latter rises there will be a greater use of goods—such as automobiles—which to some extent are still in the luxury class.

"We Don't Want More Taxes"

Asked if he would balance the budget by cutting expenditures or increasing taxes, Sloan replied:

"Cut expenses, of course. My God, we don't want any more taxes."

Sloan said he did not look for much change in the present business level unless some outside force caused either an upturn or a decline.

"I think the trend is going to continue," he said, "just about as it is."

The automobile industry, he pointed out, has slumped slightly since January 1, just as business generally has. But he did not think this would prove particularly harmful.

"Lots of Idle Opportunities"

Recalling President Roosevelt's desire to bring together "idle men, machines and money," he remarked that "idle opportunities might very well be included in this list."

"There are lots of idle opportunities lying around—marvelous opportunities," he said.

Naturally, he said, the automobile industry's market will be improved as highway construction advances.

The barriers which have been erected in the way of business, he said, "will have to be removed before we can go ahead."

Dr. Altman Testifies

Dr. Oscar L. Altman, of the SEC, told the committee that in no year since 1922 had non-financial business enterprises relied on the capital markets for as much as $2,000,000,000 in any one year, despite average annual outlays for plant and equipment of $8,500,000,000 u pto 1929 and $5,800,000,000 from 1935 to 1937 inclusive.

The major source of funds, he said, has been business savings. Likewise, he declared that funds set aside by business enterprises in recent years for depreciation and depletion have been 50 per cent greater than in the early 1920's.

Frederick B. Rentschler, chairman of the board of the United Anticraft Co., told the committee that the company had demonstrated its ability to meet all plant requirements entirely from earnings.

food inspector, explained that the racing usually is conducted over the week-end by one of the inspectors. Pigeons are transported several hundred miles and then checked on the time they return home, he said.

Cream Delivery Denied

"What are they trying to do," inquired Schulte, "make a detective out of a pigeon in order to catch the bootleggers?"

Chairman Bates remarked that he understood that inspectors were drawn to the pigeon races so that the milk "bootleggers" would know where they were while a delivery was made.

John A. Wilson, vice president and general manager of the Comico Products Corp., of Alexandria, was grilled by J. Edward Burroughs, jr., counsel of the sub-committee, regarding trips he had reputedly made to the Highland Farms Dairy during the recent labor trouble.

Wilson, while admitting a trade link with the dairy and its ice cream plant, denied that he had delivered any unlicensed cream to the dairy the latter part of April as implied by Burroughs.

Unpasteurized Milk Barred

During cross-examination of Staub it was developed that Mrs. J. R. Henderson, of 2108 Sixteenth street northwest, who operates a boarding house, had been ordered not to bring in any unpasteurized milk from her farm in Forest Glen, Md., after a sample of it was taken by an inspector.

A Health Department test showed, Dr. Ashworth said, that the milk contained 1,800,000 bacteria, or 90 times that permitted by law, though no filth. It had not been properly cooled, he said.

Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal brought out through questioning of Staub that the Health Department had only one inspector assigned to the local distribution plants prior to the seizure of 2,400 gallons of alleged "bootleg" cream March 4. He usually had to make his rounds by street car, Staub said.

The inspector expressed the opinion that two to five men would be required in each plant to police the dairies properly.

U. S. Worker Questioned

Burroughs developed the fact that Staub had uncovered only three minor cases of the delivery of unlicensed cream since the passage of the milk act in 1925. Two were to an ice cream dealer and one to a delicatessen.

The sub-committee questioned Thomas W. Eberhart, Department of Agriculture employe, regarding a letter he had written to members of the sub-committee complaining that he had been shut out of the Washington market.

The inquiry developed the fact that he leases a farm and lives in Washington and that the letter was written on a typewriter in the House District Committee room, although carrying the address of his dairy farm near Charles Town, W. Va.

Eberhart, who was brought to the hearing by a policeman, said he had asked a girl in the House District Committee to write the letter for him, but he couldn't remember who she was.

Pepco Chief Quits to Head St. Louis Firm

McClellan Declares He Won't Give Up D. C. Civic Affiliations

Dr. William McClellan, president of the Potomac Electric Co. since 1933, resigned yesterday to assume the acting presidency of Union Electric Co. of Missouri, St. Louis, Mo., largest unit of the North American Co.'s utility chain.

McClellan is said to have been picked as a "troubleshooter" to clear up affairs of the St. Louis company, now under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission for alleged violations of the securities act. He succeeds Louis H. Egan, who withdrew as St. Louis head in a recent shake-up of officials.

Other officers affected in the St. Louis shake-up, announced in New York City Tuesday by J. F. Fogarty, president of the North American Co., were Frank J. Boehm, executive vice president, and A. C. Laun, vice president, who withdrew along with Egan.

Succeeding to McClellan's post here will be A. G. Neal, heretofore vice president and general manager of P. E. P. Co. A veteran with the utility, joining it as controller in 1918, Neal was elected vice president in 1925, general manager in 1933, and a member of the board of directors of both P. E. P. Co. and its parent organization, Washington Railway & Electric Co. in 1934.

McClellan will not relinquish his civic affiliations here, which include the Community Chest, for which he acted as campaign manager in 1937, and the National Symphony Orchestra, of which he is now president. He will retain his home at Burgundy Farms, near Alexandria, he said.

Seal is generally credited with hvaing obtained the passage of more District legislation in Congress than any of his predecessors. Forty-six years old, Seal is married and is the father of three children. He was born in Lexington, Va., on November 17, 1893, and attended Washington and Lee University. He was graduated from Georgetown Law School.

Two Genial Exhibits Open on Local Screens

Bing Crosby Scores in 'East Side of Heaven;' The Hardy Family Takes Bumps at Palace; Short-Reel Subjects Are Uniformly Excellent

"EAST SIDE OF HEAVEN." Universal picturization of an original screen story by David Butler and Herbert Polesie, adapted by William Conselman, starring Bing Crosby, Joan Blondell and Mischa Auer, with Irene Hervey, Jerome Cowan, Robert Kent, C. Aubrey Smith and Sandy Somerville. Music by Johnny Burke and James V. Monaco. Directed by David Butler. Previewed Monday afternoon, May 15. At RKO-Keith's Theater.

"THE HARDYS RIDE HIGH." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a screen play by Agnes Christine Johnston, Kay Van Riper and William Ludwig, based upon characters created by Aurania Rouverol, with Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Ann Rutherford, Sara Haden, Virginia Grey, Minor Watson, John King, John T. Murray, George Irving, Halliwell Hobbes, Aileen Pringle, Marsha Hunt, Donald Briggs, William Orr and Truman Bradley. Directed by George B. Seitz. Previewed Tuesday afternoon, May 16. At the Palace Theater.

There is little in this amiable exhibit that one can believe, beyond the fact that it is tuneful and agreeable entertainment.

Bing Crosby lays no claim to being a great actor. He has some fair right to set himself up as one of the most effective singers on the screen. He has practically no "acting" to do in "East Side of Heaven," but he sings more than he has in his last several pictures. That should be good enough for the public. But Bing's castin, in this one is just a trifle bizarre.

BELL

The star appears first as a singing messenger boy, who conveys messages of felicitation over the phone in song. A good idea, even if it wouldn't work. Then he becomes a singing taxi driver, whose car is a free-rover in which a passenger pays no fare and hears a deal of genial crooning in addition. Also a good idea, if——

During his tenure of these two jobs, however, Denny Martin—that would be Mr. Crosby—becomes implicated in any number of unusual adventures. He has himself quite a time trying to woo the telephone operator in the swank hotel, is intrusted with the custody of the baby that is the main bone of contention among a crabbed millionaire, his drunken son-in-law and the mother; has the police on his trail and experiences no little difficulty in keeping his roommate, Nicky, a bogus astrologer, under control. Out of this comes a film fable that is not half so bad as it might sound.

Last Half Is Best

There is a radio announcer mixed up in the whole business who manages to make more than his share of trouble.

The entire point of the matter is that after the first half of the film has dragged past its weary way, there eventuate scenes, incidents and songs that will engage the rapt attention of any judicious amusement-seeker. Two of the songs are worth jotting down in the book. They are the title song, "East Side of Heaven," and "Hang Your Heart on a Hickory Limb," which is built up into the full proportions of a production number.

Crosby has never been in better voice than he is here. His singing is the picture's mainstay. Next to that comes the exceptionally appealing appearance of Baby Sandy Henville in the role of the play's problem. This tiny tot is one of the most ingratiating young actresses we have seen in years, although she is cast as a boy in this subject. If anybody "steals the show," Sandy is the one who does it. In the principal feminine role, Joan Blondell struck me as being at all times Joan Blondell, never quite getting into the "feel" of her character. Mischa Auer, as Nicky, is not always as funny as he should be, but still is funny enough for all practical purposes. Others who appreciably aid the goings-on are Irene Hervey, C. Aubrey Smith, Jerome Cowan, Robert Kent, J. Farrell McDonald, Arthur Hoyt,

"Time" Discusses South

The new "March of Time," also on the bill at RKO-Keith's this week, is an especially interesting and informative consideration of the problems of the South and its economic place in the affairs of the Nation. Devoted exclusively to this one topic, "Time," in this issue, is rather more comprehensive and judicial than usual. Both sides of the problem are presented with intelligence, dramatic "punch" and utmost fairness—as nearly as we are able to judge. A more hilarious inclusion among the short reels is "The Hockey Champ," newest of the Walt Disney Donald Duck "vehicles."

The new issue of the Pathe News rounds out a bill that should have wide appeal among the lovers of light and inconsequential entertainment.

In "The Hardys Ride High," Judge Hardy and his fabulous family no doubt will continue to flourish at the box-office, although they suffer a slight deflation of fortune during the action of the play. While not completely transparent, this subject follows a familiar pattern and utilizes a great many of the dramatic and comic devices that have proved so popular in earlier releases in the series that has boomed from obscurity to top-flight rating.

The gist of this one is that Judge Hardy seems about to inherit $2,000,000 from the estate of a forebear whom he has held up as a model to his family through the years. To secure the fortune it is necessary for the Hardy family to journey from Carvel to Detroit, where the fascinations of city life and the prospect of great wealth have strange effects upon the juvenile members of the household. Andy Hardy immediately projects himself into the gay pursuits of a young-man-about-town, becomes involved with a conniving "in-law" and a chorus girl and finds himself, eventually, in a desperate situation. Marian Hardy goes in for fine and costly raiment—all of which she charges to her ostensibly rich father— and goes "social" in a large way. Mrs. Hardy manages to keep her feet on the ground, but Aunt Milly goes slightly giddy over a supposed wooer who turns out to be only an avaricious real estate salesman. And that's the way it goes.

The Fortune Vanishes

Then through a reasonably logical succession of events it turns out that Judge Hardy's ancestor was only a foster child and that he is not eligible to receive the inheritance, after all. Returned to Carvel, the Hardy family undergoes a slight readjustment. It is all on the side of a further exposition of the family's utter integrity and devotion.

All of this, as I have said, is set forth by the usual devices. Andy has almost perpetual girl trouble, Marian undergoes her usual delusions of grandeur, the judge finally has to straighten out his affairs by long-distance phone—and why must this always be? Mrs. Hardy is completely understanding and Aunt Milly recovers from her heart attack. Scattered through the proceedings are several of those "man-to-man" talks between Andy and his father that invariably are salutary.

The cast, of course, remains about as it has been in the past. That incomparably fine actor, Lewis S. Stone, continues in the role of Judge Hardy, with Fay Holden as his sympathetic and helpful wife. Mickey Rooney, needless to say, is, as usual, Andy Hardy, and comes nearer ruining the picture than anyone else in it. Master Rooney is uncurbed in his present adventure, overplays outrageously and, as I have said before, "mugs" all over the place. Cecilia Parker, Ann Rutherford, Sara Haden, Virginia Grey, Minor Watson, John King, John T. Murray, Halliwell Hobbes, Aileen Pringle and Marsha Hunt are among the others in the cast who contribute most to the mixture.

An Impressive Auxiliary

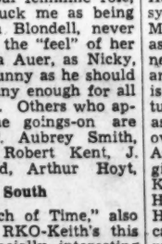
Most important among the supplementary subjects at the Palace this week is "While America Sleeps," a new release in the "Crime Does Not Pay" series, devoted to foreign spy activities and sabotage as it is carried out in this country in peacetimes. Since these short reels are understood to be factual, "While America Sleeps" becomes a brief document of utmost enlightenment and concern. It is extremely well done.

"Glimpses of Australia," a natural-color travelogue, and the new issue of "News of the Day" complete a bill that should strike a responsive note in the public mind.

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 18.—Today I watched Gus Edwards conducting the first rehearsal of his famous song, "School Days," which brought so many people to fame, among them Eddie Cantor, Walter Winchell, Joe E. Brown, Lila Lee. The alert, hopeful faces of 50 kids made me wonder if Charlie Rogers hadn't found the secret to what the public wants. Anyway, it's well worth thinking about.



HOPPER

There are more kid stars than grownups among the best sellers in pictures today. Let's have a look at them:

Shirley Temple, Jane Withers, Virginia Weidler, Judy Garland, Bonita Granville, Janet Chapman, Deanna Durbin, Peter Holden, Bobs Watson, Jackie Cooper, Freddie Bartholomew and the Dead End Kids. And pictures like the "Hardy" series, "Jones Family," "What a Life," "Nancy Drew, Detective," and the Children's Orchestra in "Music School," starring Jascha Heifetz. Some of the kids are scarcely big enough to hold their instruments. And the kids are so good that Heifetz asked to conduct them in Mendelsohn's Concerto, which will be the finish of the picture.

Then there is the milkman's baby, Sandy Henville, who stole the spotlight from Bing Crosby in "East Side of Heaven." After they'd signed him, they found "he" was a she.

R. K. O. has Baby Bert with Ginger Rogers in "Little Mother."

I may be all wrong but I believe this is what fans want. Because those pictures never miss. They're making money to support superepics that the fans stay away from by the thousands.

Sam Bricker, a grip on "Winter Carnival" set, watching Ann Sheridan and Richard Carlson, muttered: "This may be a machine age but love is still made by hand."

Ben Bernie is out playing one-nighters with his band because of his love for horses, horses, horses.

Did you know that Twentieth Century is re-shooting added scenes for "Alexander Graham Bell" for the Canadian market? They forgot to include his life up there. Canada wouldn't accept it without.

Sonja Henie's command performance for the Danish Crown Prince and Princess was for them alone. No stars, no press permitted!

Have you ever known it to fail? When you give away something in a generous moment, you nearly always want it back. Warner's made "The Crowd Roars" with Cagney and O'Brien, then sold the title to Metro for Taylor's fight picture. Now they want to remake it with John Payne and Frank McHugh and they're stuck for a name.

Sings His Way to Another Hit

BING CROSBY,

who does more than his usual meed of singing in "East Side of Heaven," the new Universal production, which opened yesterday on the screen at the RKO-Keith Theater. The star is supported by Joan Blondell, Mischa Auer, Baby Sandy Henville, C. Aubrey Smith, Jerome Cowan and many others in this agreeable entertainment that quite obviously was planned to be nothing else

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, May 18.

FRANK HAGUE, JR., whose appointment to the bench was met with national editorial criticism, is slated, tentatively, to receive an honorary degree from the John Marshall College of Law next month . . . Sylvia Sidney, like Franchot Tone, went to a hospital after the closing of "The Gentle People," for a minor throat operation. Elia Kazan, who was featured in that show, left for a vacation—in Harlan, Ky. . . . Ed Flynn made his first offer of settlement in connection with the disappearance of the Abe Lincoln statue from the fair grounds.

A FEW DAYS ago Lady Ashley, now Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks—who never has been known to wear a hat—appeared at Fefe's Monte Carlo wearing an odd "turban" swathed around her forehead and almost down to her eyebrows . . . The fashion columns for the next two days announced this new mode being introduced by Lady Ashley . . . As a matter of fact, the lady wasn't aware of the fact that she was setting a new style. She wore this bandage-effect—to cover a rash.

BURNS AND ALLEN and Block and Sully, who haven't been overfriendly for many years, because of the similarity of their routines, were reconciled at a party tendered for them by Eddie Cantor . . . Mayor LaGuardia told Mayor Rossi of San Francisco, "You, too, have a nice fair. The Frisco Fair is so nice, it's good enough to be one of the exhibits at the New York Fair" . . . At Conde Nast's cocktail party, Jules Bache saw Carol Carstairs jotting down the names and phone numbers of a group of pretty girls. "Oh, Carol," said Bache, wearily, "would you mind—just make a carbon copy of that for me?"

CLAIRE BOOTHE, the playwright, now is completing her first musical comedy, for which Dick Rogers and Larry Hart are providing the score . . . Miss Boothe listened to the songs they had written and then offered one suggestion. "At the end of the show," she said, "instead of the entire cast singing one song, why not have them sing parts of all the songs?" . . . "My dear," said the veteran Rogers, "that is what is customarily called 'The Finale.'"

ERNEST BOYD didn't attend the party given for the debut of James Joyce's new book about Dublin, "Finnegans Wake." "Being a Dubliner and an author," Boyd explained, "I am availing myself of the privilege of not having to wade through Joyce's new book" . . . One of the cases being checked by the G-men as a result of the story being spilled by Albert Chaperau concerns a phony $10,000 United States note. Chaperau tried to involve a New York attorney who wanted to cash it for a client . . . Virginia Bolen rejected an opportunity to appear in "Babes in Arms," preferring to accept a role in the WPA production of "Sing For Your Supper." After a year-and-a-half rehearsal the show opened recently. As a result of her performance Miss Bolan just was signed by RKO.

THE CURRENT STORY is of a rabbit who was found trying to escape across the German frontier . . . "What's the idea of rushing away?" the rabbit was asked . . . "Well," he answered, "Hitler has just introduced a law banning all giraffes" . . . "But you're not a giraffe," the rabbit was assured . . . "Yeah?" replied the rabbit, "Well—YOU try and tell it to that guy."

ALFRED HITCHCOCK, the British director, went to Hollywood last month and took his cook with him . . . Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock tendered a birthday party for their cook at Dave Chasen's restaurant . . . Just before the birthday cake was presented, Hitchcock asked Chasen to supply "Happy Birthday" music . . . The proprietor scurried among the other customers asking if any one present could play the piano . . . An elderly gentleman sitting alone volunteered, walked to the old, broken piano and played "Happy Birthday" . . . "Thank you," Hitchcock acknowledged. "My name is Alfred Hitchcock" . . . "And mine," said the world-famous pianist, "is Moritz Rosenthal."

CHICAGO NIGHT clubs now are operating under a 1 a. m. curfew, because of an outburst of shootings in night clubs. The most recent victim was a man named Dubois, manager-publicist for Band Leader "King" Lear The front pages headlined it: "King Lear's Manager Killed." The band leader read the reports and lamented: "Dubois said he'd get me on the front pages—even if it would kill him" . . . District Attorney Dewey has some indictments concerning the World's Fair . . . Britain's censor deleted from "The Women" the line: " I wish the stork would take the Indian sign off me." He said: "The meaning eludes me." The censor then approved the substitute line "I wish I could get myself removed from the stork's honor list."

Louella O. Parsons

Who for Two Weeks Has Delegated to Dorothy Manners Her

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

By International News Service.

Hollywood, May 18.—Greer Garson, who told me she spent the most miserable year of her life lonely and ill in Hollywood before "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," came along; need have no fear of wasting time any longer. On a silver platter, M-G-M is handing her George Bernard Shaw's "The Doctor's Dilemma," which Gabriel Pascal will produce in London the minute she completes "Susan and God," the Gertrude Lawrence stage hit.

LOUELLA PARSONS

There was no doubt in anyone's mind following the premiere of "Mr. Chips" that a new star was born in this read-headed, green-eyed charmer. Incidentally, she's much younger and far more exotic looking off the screen than she appears as "Mrs. Chips." With her startling appearance there's no reason why she shouldn't do glamour girls as well as appealing feminine roles. Amusing that in spite of her big Hollywood hit she should be packing her bags again so soon for home and England for her third picture.

Elizabeth Bergner, coming to Warners for one super-colossal epic with Paul Muni, is the hot rumor that had us dangling on the Burbank telephone all morning. They won't say "yes" and they won't say "no"—but this much is certain: The studio has been contacting the expatriate German star by transatlantic telephone, tlaking facst and figures. First report was that they wanted her to co-star with Muni in "The American Way," the Fredric March-Florence Eldridge stage hit, considering that the role of the immigrant wife would fit Miss Bergner to a "T." This seemed logical. But Warners deny the story, insisting that "if" Miss Bergner comes here at all it will not be for "The American Way."

Chatter in Hollywood: Heard from Grace Moore, who feels that she has been misunderstood in many things that she said. Perhaps she has. Things often sound different in print than they do in conversation, but, nevertheless, we do hope Grace will measure her words when discussing Hollywood in the future. She tells me that she hopes to return and that there is a possibility that she may go into the Irving Berlin operetta, "Say It With Music," at Twentieth Century-Fox. That would really be interesting because she started her career on Broadway with Irving. She was also offered a Lehar musical at Universal and there is a chance she may also do that. She says she is eager to return to Hollywood and has no intention of leaving it permanently. Now that Uncle Sam has been appeased and the Hays office has okayed the script, "It Can't Happen Here" gets under way next week at M.-G.-M., with Lewis Stone as Jessup, and Woody Van Dyke directing. The big headache still is finding the right actor for the dictator, but it comes to me straight that if Orson Welles would change his mind about wanting to boss everything the role would be his. Unfortunately for his movie career so far, the young genius of the Mercury Theater wants to write, direct and supervise everything he does which probably would not set so well with Van Dyke and Lucien Hubbard, the producer.

RKO is offering Robert Morley everything but Ginger Rogers to come back to Hollywood for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame"—though not for the title role. He's being paged for the part Ernest Torrence created in the original version with Lon Chaney, and right now it looks very much as though he might accept. No actor ever made a bigger hit in pictures and deserted them so fast as Morley. After his sensation as the none-too-bright Louis XVI in "Marie Antoinette," every producer in town offered him a contract. But he insisted on sticking to his stage contract for "Oscar Wilde," which, by the way, has been one of the few real hits of the New York season.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: When the Warner gang heard that Johnny (Scat) Davis' daughter had finally arrived they sent the proud pa the following wire: 'Aren't you glad your last picture was 'Give Me a Child' instead of 'Four Daughters'?' Elaine Barrie Barrymore telling friends the minute her divorce is over she's heading for a summer stock job at Dennis, Mass.; Leslie Howard's pretty daughter such a young lady now she's stepping out to the La Conga with Richard Greene; Jackie Westrope flew into town and took his bride, Nan Grey, night-clubbing; Hal Wallis and his son, Brent, having the time of their lives riding with the engineer on the Santa Fe heading East; the two chain store millionaires, B. D. Miller and Fremont C. Peck, with their wives, visiting Jane Withers on the set and seeing movies made for the first time.

Jimmy Stewart wouldn't give the news-snoopers the name of the beautiful New York socialite on his arm at Slapsy Maxie's last night; Ouida and Basil Rathbone completely broken up over the passing of Gladys Earlcott, the old-time stage actress. But certainly these two did all in their power to make her last days happy and free of financial worries; the Bob Hopes get off for Europe in August leaving okayed decoration plans for their new Toluca house next door to Bing's; Pat Van Cleve (Mrs. Arthur Lake) made such a hit singing an impromptu number at the new Cabana Club they offered her a contract.

That's all for today.

Stories of Indians Scare British Star

The world's most gullible actor is now the most skeptical.

When Warner Bros. brought Bruce Lester from England to play the boy in "Boy Meets Girl," a group of stage friends played an elaborate rib on him. He was warned of many things about the United States.

Describing them and his naive credulity to Margaret Lindsay, with whom he is now cast in the spy picture "Enemy Agent," Bruce explained:

"They told me to avoid offending anyone here who carried a violin case, because nine times in ten it contained a sub-machine gun and its owner was a desperate gangster.

"I didn't take a rifle along, as they recommended, but I believed there might be need for it. The coasts of America were very civilized, they said, but the Indians in Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska were still dangerous.

"The best meat to order at restaurants, I was told, was venison. Pork was unhealthy and in some cities it was banned by law. The beef, they said, had a bad flavor. And so on—a lot of balderdash. I was taken in so completely that the disillusionment made me a real skeptic."

Indian Scout

Andy Devine today is wearing a long blond wig for the role of an Indian scout in "Geronimo," spectacular film story of the Apache war lord who defied the United States Army for 10 years and cost the Government $41,000,000.

Commons Bloc Opposes Free Arab State

Some Conservatives, Laborites Denounce Palestine Policy

London, May 18 (AP).—Laborites and some Conservatives will oppose the government's new Palestine policy when the House of Commons is asked to approve the plan next Monday at the beginning of a two-day debate.

A Labor amendment to the government motion for approval was prepared today.

It characterized the plan for an independent Palestine under Arab control as "inconsistent with the letter and spirit of the mandate" of the League of Nations under which Britain holds the Holy Land.

Review By League Sought

It advised an examination of the British proposals, announced yesterday in a white paper, by the League's permanent mandates commission before Parliament is committed to them.

It was expected some Conservatives would move a similar amendment.

The parliamentary committee in a meeting to consider the new policy was believed to have expressed a fear that nonco-operation of Jews would delay indefinitely the British plan.

Dr. Chaim Weizman, president of the Jewish Agency of Palestine, after telling the all-party parliamentary meeting that the proposals were "completely unacceptable" to the Jews, addressed a crowded meeting of Jews in a London hall.

Dr. Weizman said the government's new policy would end in a breakdown under "the sheer weight of its injustice."

"The statement of policy, to say the least, lacks merit of frankness when it attempts by ambiguous phraseology and complete shifting of emphasis to square the new policy with the pledge given to Jews," he said.

"It turns the mandate upside down when it pretends that the obligation to the Arabs can not be fulfilled unless Palestine is granted independence and Jews are relegated to the position of a permanent minority."

V. Jabotinsky, president of the militant New Zionist organization, declared in a statement that Jews would use all means—not excluding force—to insure that Palestine "would not be robbed from them," and that it would remain open to millions compelled to make their way out of the "European hell."

The New Zionist organization was formed by the revisionist Party which left the Zionist Congress in 1935. It asserts it has 750,000 registered members in 32 countries, with particular strength in Eastern Europe.

Promise Held Broken

The organization advocates establishment of a Jewish armed force to "protect Jews in Palestine" without relying exclusively on British troops. Its policy demands "fair fulfillment" of the Balfour Declaration of 1917, which promised the Jews a national home in the Holy Land.

Jabotinsky said the government's action was "a flagrant breach of the wartime promise to the Jewish people" and added:

"It means, in plain terms that Britain now tears up her promise and proposes to hand over the Jews to the mercy of Arabs whom she herself has described in official documents during the last three years as 'bandits and murderers.'" had testified that Great Britain was building battleships of 42,000 tons and Japan craft of 42,000 to 46,000 tons.

Vandenberg contended that Congress in authorizing the larger vessels had acted on "now discredited" foreign press reports that Japan was building bigger ships than ours. Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, joined him in the attack, with an assertion that "when the facts are known it will be found that Japan is not building this sized battleship, that the building program started with Great Britain and that it was started after an understanding with this Government."

Positive Proof Cited

Chairman Walsh of the naval committee, who had left the chamber to check with naval officials on the question, returned with assurances that both Britain and Japan were building ships larger that the old limit of 35,000 tons. Admiral Leahy, chief of naval operations, had informed him, he said, that the Navy has "positive proof" that Japan is constructing battleships larger than 35,000 tons, although they only know from Italian press reports that 46,000-ton ships are building in Japan.

Walsh said that the Senate Naval Committee has been trying to get information as to whether Japan is fortifying the mandated islands, as well as data on their shipbuilding and air base plans.

"We can get absolutely no information," he added. "No one is allowed to land on those islands. No vessel is allowed to approach them."

460,000 Will Be In Camp

Meanwhile Army officials revealed that the United States will have more men under arms this summer than at any time since the World War. This statement was made as a schedule of summer maneuvers were announced, in which about 100,000 Regulars and National Guardsmen will be involved. Including the war games some 460,000 regulars, guardsmen, reservists and C. M. T. C. enrollees will be given training.

Largest of the field maneuvers will be those of the First Army, in which 67,000 regular and National Guard troops will particupate. The war game will be split into two parts, with 22,000 troops from the District and nearby States concentrating at Manassas, Va., August 5 to 19 and the remainder at Plattsburg, N. Y.

U. S. British Join In Cleanup of China Terrorists

Shanghai (Friday), May 19 (U.P.). Police, aided by United States Marines and British infantrymen, today began a house to house search of the Anglo-American area of the International Settlement to round up suspected Chinese nationalist terrorists.

All roads leading from the Anglo-American area into the Japanese area, the Chinese city and the French concession, were barricaded.

The raids, beginning at 4 a. m., were designed to forestall a reported Japanese move to seize police control of the entire Settlement area.

Madrilenos Await Triumphal Entry Of Gen. Franco

Madrid, May 18 (AP).—Hundreds of thousands waited in fiesta mood tonight for Gen. Franco's triumphant entry into this traditional capital of Spain tomorrow, symbolizing establishment of Spain's new Nationalist order. The day will be a national holiday.

In one of the mightiest military demonstrations in Spanish history, Italian and German soldiers who served the Nationalists will parade for the last time in Spain.

An estimated 12,000 Italians will sail soon for home from Cadiz and Alicante. Between 5,000 and 6,000 Germans are to sail from Vigo.

shops. Many were hurt when police attempted to break up the march.

At Tel Aviv, at least 40 were given first-aid treatment at hospitals after clashes between rival youth groups.

Thirty-five Jews and two British policemen were injured in Jerusalem late in the day as Jews attacked the district commissioner's offices. Windows were smashed, a sign-board was ripped down and an attempt made to tear down the British Union Jack. Rioting and casualties increased rapidly after darkness. The British police, after using restraint throughout the day, began charging Jewish crowds with clubs and driving them helter-skelter through the streets. The crowds laid down a barrage of stones in retaliation.

British police fired upon the automobile of the Czecho-Slovak consul, wounding his Arab chauffeur, when the car smashed through barbed wire barricades thrown up to protect the district commissioner's office.

The disorders spread to Haifa, Jaffa and other centers, adding to the list of injured.

Most of the Holy land's 400,000 Jews were mobilized in the anti-British demonstrations. Government buildings throughout the country were ringed with armed guards, drawn from the British military force of 25,000 troops and 5,000 police. Government offices in Tel-Aviv and the central immigration headquarters in Jerusalem were wrecked by incendiary bombs and gutted by fire, destroying valuable records of Jewish immigration during the last 20 years. At Tel-Aviv the Union Jack was hauled down from the government offices and replaced with the Zionist flag.

War Department and the Navy Department to establish offices in Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska, in addition to stations in the Panama Canal Zone and in the Philippines," Hoover said.

"With out present personnel it is not possible to give prompt attention to those cases. Even if this appropriation is granted, it is doubtful if we can accede to those requests."

Secretary Hull emphasized his warning in declaring this country's vital interests "are being threatened in an increasing number of places and to an alarming degree," adding:

"Situations which a few years ago we would have considered as incredible and as impossible of existing in our relations with other states are with us today as a reality and have to be dealt with in the most concrete fashion every day."

"The conditions which we have to face in the world today are very much worse than those which confronted us when I was last before you," the Secretary said. "I did not mislead you then and I am now equally earnest when I say that the responsibilities of this department will greatly increase during the coming years—and this entirely independent of the question as to whether there will be peace or war."

The committee went against President Roosevelt in inserting a provision in the bill nullifying his executive order placing G-men under Civil Service. Explaining its action, the committee said:

"Information that the FBI has been placed under the operations of the Civil Service comes to the committee with a note of disappointment. The personnel of this agency has been built up over a series of years and possesses qualifications that even the Civil Service Commission admits are a particularly high standard."

Hoover testified, the hearings revealed, that 12,000 of the 14,067 "public enemies" were at large "constantly perpetrating new crimes." While there has been some decrease in certain types of crimes between 1931 and 1938, Hoover said, 20 murders are being committed daily, while other crimes aggregate nearly 5,000 a day.

Stormtroopers Reported in Danzig

London, May 18 (U.P.).—Several thousand Nazi stormtroopers, disguised as tourists, including nearly 3,000 members of Fuehrer Adolph Hitler's "Liebstandarte" bodyguard, have arrived quietly in the free city of Danzig in recent days, according to confidential diplomatic advices reaching London tonight.

The stormtroopers were said to have traveled to Danzig by sea from Stettin, Germany, to avoid passing through the Polish corridor with its heavy concentrations of Polish armed forces.

Protests Rise In Capital Over Palestine Plan

Dr. Goldman Quotes Brandies Against 'Renunciation' Policy

A rising tide of protest from prominent Jewish leaders in America against the new British policy in Palestine yesterday carried with it these developments:

Secretary Hull told the American Zionist leader, Rabbi Goldman, and later his press conference, that State Department officials were carefully examining the British White Paper. On a question about the United States policy, he referred to a statement he made in October, 1938, declaring "the department will take all necessary measures for the protection of American rights and interests in Palestine."

Rabbi Goldman appealed to Secretary Hull and the President to intervene and prevent "renunciation" of the Balfour declaration, and "repudiation" of the American-British Palestine Mandate Convention of 1924.

Statement of Brandeis

Former Supreme Court Justice Brandeis, through Rabbi Goldman, said that Jews would continue to enter Palestine, and go forward with the upbuilding of the Jewish national home, regardless of obstacles.

The Washington Rabbinical Council summoned all Jews to demonstrate solidarity in defense of Jewish rights in Palestine by gathering in their synagogues today and tomorrow and taking the historic Biblical oath—"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, may my right hand forget its cunning."

Col. Julius I. Peyser, president of the Eighth Street Temple, declined to join in the appeal for a mass protest, warning that the meetings were "playing with fire" and would cause trouble to the Jews in America and elsewhere. He said, "I am not willing to destroy the friendship of Great Britain for the Jews on account of a matter which seems to be the affair of Great Britain."

American Policy

Hull's earlier statement which he cited yesterday as the American policy in Palestine said that American rights were defined by the mandate convention of 1924. None of the articles of the convention, he said, "empower the Government of the United States to prevent modification of the terms of any of the mandates.

"Under their provisions, however, this Government can decline to recognize the validity of the mandates unless each modification has been assented to by the Government of the United States.

Hull's statement also declared: "As is well known, the American people have for many years taken a close interest in the development of the Jewish National Home in Palestine. It is in the light of this interest that the American Government and people have watched with the keenest sympathy the development in Palestine of the National Home, a project in which American intellect and capital have played a leading role."

Dr. Goldman said that Justice Brandeis's views on Palestine were based on four points:

A legal obligation assumed by Great Britain is the basis for Jewish constructive enterprise in Palestine. That legal right, sustained by humanitarian needs, cannot be obliterated for private advantage.

What does the world propose to do with the Jews for whom exile is enforced? Unless civilization has so reverted to primitivism as to wish the destruction of homeless Jews, it must encourage the proved medium to solve in great measure the problem of Jewish homelessness.

The absorptive capacity is stated to be the criterion by which Jewish entry into Palestine should be determined. Disinterested experts have proved that Palestine is equipped to absorb 100,000 Jews a year.

On the basis of legal right, which Great Britain with the sanction of the world established, and of the pressing human need, Jews will continue to enter Palestine, assured of the confident support of the Jewish people that they will build in Palestine a land beneficial to all its inhabitants.

Before reporting Justice Brandeis' views, in a press conference at the Willard, Dr. Goldman read a statement declaring that "Great Britain's decision to stop Jewish immigration into Palestine after 1944, and thereafter freeze the Jewish population to a permanent minority status is tantamount to the creation in Palestine of another ghetto."

Rabbi Goldman said the Jews of Palestine should defy laws of Great Britain excluding them from land to which they have a historic right. Asked what action the Palestine Jews might take, Dr. Goldman suggested a policy of "nonco-operation" with the British government.

Poland Foresees Peaceful End To Corridor Row With Nazis

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, May 18.—A conciliatory gesture from Warsaw gave rise to hope tonight that the long quarrel between Poland and Germany might be adjusted by peaceful negotiation.

This hope for ending the bitter dispute over Germany's demand for the return of the Free City of Danzig and a right of way across the Polish Corridor was based on the comment of the official Gazeta Polska that a "reasonable settlement" should be possible.

Officials examined the Polish statement with interest but remarked that Warsaw's conciliatory words were not yet backed by substantial suggestions of what a "reasonable settlement" would be.

"The reasonable settlement for which Poland now is grasping is exactly what Germany has been wanting all along," said a propaganda ministry spokesman.

"It is to be emphasized that the Fuehrer in all his discussion of the Polish problem never mentioned the word war."

With increasing vigor, Nazis voiced demands for return of German colonies.

Reports persisted that Hitler, completing his inspection of fortifications along the western frontier, next week would go to the Polish border to examine eastern defenses.

Kentucky's master distillers endowed Old Sunny Brook with deeper mellowness . . . with the genial quality that sets it apart. Pride of many a man's private cellar, this choice bourbon richly deserves the description: "cheerful as its name."

Board Inquires About Ability Of Appointee

Mrs. Wisner's Successor In Montgomery Named By Judge Gassaway

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, 9213 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md.

Intense campaigning by Montgomery County clubwomen opposing dismissal of Mrs. Sadie Wisner, veteran county probation officer, began to bear fruit yesterday when the Montgomery County commissioners questioned the qaulifications of Mrs. Madeline Fennell, new appointee.

The commissioners received a letter from Judge John H. Gassaway of the County Juvenile Court, informing them that he had appointed Mrs. Fennell to replace Mrs. Wisner, effective June 1. The board instructed Richard H. Lansdale, clerk of the board, to write to the judge and inquire into the qualifications of Mrs. Fennell.

The judge's letter did not state the experience or other qualifications of Mrs. Fennell, the commissioners pointed out, and they are unable to determine her fitness for the position without such information. The appointment is made by the judge of the juvenile court but the commissioners have authority to refuse to pay the salary if they do not feel the officeholder is competent.

The action of the commissioners did not question the fitness of Mrs. Fennell but asked the judge to clarify the situation by explaining her fitness for the position.

Dr. Hawks in Line for Job

Rockville—Dr. C. E. Hawks was named as first choice and Dr. G. V. Hartley as second choice for appointment as deputy medical examiner for Montgomery County yesterday by the Montgomery County Medical Society at a meeting in the courthouse at Rockville.

Both doctors are residents of Rockville and prominent in medical circles in the county. The choice of the medical society will be sent to the department of post-mortem examiners which make the appointment.

The post was created under an act of the State Legislature at the last session which created the post-mortem examiners department and also the post of medical examiner in each county. The medical examiner in effect is the coroner for the county, except that all post-mortem examinations must be made by a member of a board of three doctors named by the State board.

Underground Tanks Sought

Woodside.—Declaring that the gas and fuel oil tanks at Second avenue and the Colesville road are a menace to the surrounding community because they have been constructed above ground, the Woodside Civic Association has adopted a resolution urging that the tanks be placed underground immediately. Protest also has been made by the association against stationing a retail ice cream truck at Sixteenth Street Circle and the District line on the grounds that it creates a traffic hazard. Flooded conditions in front of the Woodside School and the Woodside M. E. Church when there are hard rains also was protested by the association. The association voted not to continue its membership in the Montgomery County Civic Association.

Marty Rubin, singer of witty (and steaming) ditties at Griffith Farms

DOWNA DA FARM: Happy news! Griffith Farms, home of the duck dinner, is open for the summer. And who d'ya think's there? Marty Rubin, who knows all the wicked lyrics ever written. He's ex-Heigh Ho, ex-Wardman cocktail lounge, and he still has his "little black book" of ballads (elegantly bawdy). With Marty is his good side-kick, Accordionist Charley Bates, one of the best. On week-ends there'll be dancing to a Sidney orchestra, but Marty and Charley will be on hand every night in the week.

Food is Griffith Farms' forte. Those chick-a-biddies you see running around the lawn will later star on the dinner table. The fields of vegetables now breaking into green will be garnered for Griffith diners, served within the hour.

POWHATAN ROOF will open on June 1, according to present plans. There may be a change of a day or so, forward or backward. It's due to be a great big week from any angle. June 1 is that noble day, pay day, for the Government lads and lasses. Oscar's third anniversary party as manager of the popular Hi Hat will be celebrated on June 1, too. Decoration Day falls on Tuesday, May 30, and on the proceding Monday evening the Shoreham Terrace will open—and a preview of Decoration Day it's going to be! Yowsah!

L'ESCARGOT TERRACE will open on Thursday, May 25. George Marchal (1939 version of the Maurice Chevalier of 1920) and Mlle. Elise will fly down from the New York's World's Fair to entertain for the opening. L'Escargot's Terrace is a duplicate of famed Place du Tertre in Paree's Montmartre. It's understood there'll be a delegation from the French Embassy on hand for the party. As for L'Escargot's marvelous cuisine, expertly selected wines—you can't let your imagination go too far. You'll still be right.

SAN FRANCISCO IN MAYFLOWER: Mayor Angelo Rossi of San Francisco and 140 California Grays, uniformed a la West Point, invaded the Mayflower Lounge the other afternoon. With them were Frisco's Public Utility Commissioner J. F. Murphy, Police Commissioner Charles F. Traung and Public Health Commissioner John Bender.

CAROLINA PEACHES: The North Carolina Democratic Club is staging a dance and beauty contest in the Raleigh Hotel ballroom tomorrow evening. There'll be lovelies from the 100 counties of North Carolina. Your columnist is s'posed to be one of the judges. But how to pick the prettiest out of all those prettiest Ca'lina beautifuls?

NOVACHORD RECORDS: Dickering's under way to make records of Milton Davis' (Rainbow Room) novachord playing. We put our nose in (in a strictly ethical manner) to suggest that Milt should make at least one record demonstrating the most contrasted manners in which the amazing novachord can be played.

SO EASY ON THE EYES: Those Social Register lasses who dance in the Lounge Riviera every night in the week. They come arrayed either in sports clothes minus hats (great rebellion against the comic. huh?) or gypsy evening frocks.

Mary La Marre, Madrillon's songstress, who has penchants for 1,800 circa crinolines and high-pressure swing-singing.

"Hell-Cat Pat" of the Pirates' Den (she's a Social Register buccaneerette, too, so watch your step, lads), black eyed, gay, much cuter than the publicized Roosevelt button.

Luba Malina, of Troika. So full of umph-h that if she permits her eyes to drop to the ringside, jealousy is likely to break out faster than poison ivy.

Rossetti Hamilton, new hostess at the Anchor Room. Especially in that striped pink sheer with the cunning puff sleeves. Rossetti hails from Harrisonburg, Va.

Ethereal Marion Wilkins, dancing in the Shoreham Blue Room. Her white tulle skirts are 35 yards around, one-quarter of the height of the Washington Monument, half the length of a football field. Write your own wise cracks on this, mah friends!

Lovely Mlle. Rodgers (of the Rodgers at Bamboo Gardens). A brunette who makes you wonder why people ever mention blondes.

Nancy Gay, singing with Cecil Golly's orchestra at Glen Echo. The boys just look at Nancy and say, "By golly! By golly!"

Jeannette (of Federico and Jeannette at the Lotus). Women's magazines are always using the phrase "breathtakingly beautiful." One look at Jeannette and you'll know why they coined it.

MAYFAIR'S NEWEST: "Taste this," commanded Mayfair's Leo, the minute we parked. It was the newest drink and plenty delish. With a combined savor of malt and Rhine wine, and served in champagne glasses. It has a 9 per cent alky content, but Leo declares that he drank eight bottles and was fresh as a daisy (meaning normal Leo) in the morning.

Alexandria Council to Receive Building Code Tuesday Night

Council Will Order Copies of New Ordinance Printed for Builders; Sewer and Road Projects Completed; League Will Meet

The Washington Post Bureau, 907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va. Phone Temple 1787. Delivery Service. Phone Alex. 247.

City Manager Carl L. Budwesky announced yesterday the new city building code now is ready to be presented to city council for adoption Tuesday night. The code will not be read in open meeting, as all members of the council have been furnished copies to familiarize themselves with provisions.

After the ordinance is adopted it will be printed and copies made up in book form of approximately 100 pages. The cost to builders, construction men, architects and others will be determined later.

The City of Alexandria has not adopted a building code since March 1, 1910, and the ordinance at that time was signed by the late Frederick J. Paff, president of the then common council, and the late J. R. N. Curtin, president of the board of aldermen. Builders have been working all of these years under the provisions of this code, with amendments from time to time to take care of changing conditions.

Wallerstein, executive secretary of the league, will talk on recent court decisions affecting municipal operation in the State; announcements and recess at 5:15 p. m.

Harrington Defends Pay of WPA Bosses

Administrator Says Salaries Are Below Levels in Industry

The WPA is "one of the most economically administered agencies of the Federal Government, and would certainly compare favorably with any private entreprise operating on a comparable scale," Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA administrator, asserted yesterday.

In a statement showing that the average salary of the 30,000 WPA administrative employes is $1,581, compared with an average of $1,871 for the entire Federal service, Col. Harrington declared the figures "seem to refute certain critics who hav eheld that WPA was 'wasting the taxpayers' money in fancy salaries.'"

Minority Leader Martin, of Massachusetts, recently introduced a resolution in the House demanding that WPA reveal its salary statistics.

Two Governors Defend WPA

At hearings before the House committee investigating WPA, two Southern Governors, advocates of the balanced budget in their home States, defended the Federal work relief organization.

Gov. Richard W. Leche of Louisiana said, "Frankly, I don't see how we could get along in Louisiana today without the WPA." Gov. Prentice Cooper of Tennessee declared that the WPA has been "very advantageous" to his State.

Leche said he approved a 1 per cent sales tax for local relief "because I wanted the tax base spread as wide as the benefits."

"If it's good business to cut relief to income for relief in Louisiana, why isn't it good business in the Federal Government?" inquired Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, one of the leading ecenomy advocates in the House.

"I don't know," Leche replied. "I refused to run for the United States Senate so I wouldn't have to answer problems like that."

Appearing at his own request, Gov. Cooper told the committee that his administration had nothing to do with the choosing of sites for various WPA-built lakes with which his name and the names of other politically prominent Tennesseeans had been linked by Eugene R. Kuhne, former State employe. Kuhne subsequently apologized for mentioning Cooper.

The Governor added that enither he nor his family had benefited in any way from the WPA lake that had been built in Bedford, his home county. Their property, he said, was 10 or 15 miles from the lake.

When Cooper said he believed Tennessee was operating on a balanced budget, which was "a wise policy," Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, remarked, "What is good for Tennessee, is good for the Nation."

"That might be a logical conclusion," Cooper replied, "but I'm not anxious to cover too much territory."

Cooper told the committee that "I would be less than frank if I didn't tell you that politics is in the WPA." It would be "pretty hard" to keep it out, he said.

Cheaper Than FERA

In his statement on WPA administrative salaries, Col. Harrington said that only 25 or 30 raises had been granted since last July, none of which were in the Washington office.

He said that the overhead costs of the WPA were from one-fourth to one-half those of the old FERA, which operated on a basis of grants-in-aid to the States.

The administrator said that "practically the entire personnel of the Washington office has been classified in accordance with the classification act of 1923, with the assistance of the Civil Service Commission." He added that plans are now being made for a similar classification of field employes.

Col. Harrington announced that WPA rolls stood at 2,657,762 on May 10, a drop of 99,629 from April 12.

The District of Columbia showed a net gain of 22 WPA employes, Maryland a rise of and Virginia an increase of 184. Largest drop, 11,473, was in Illinois.

Col Harrington also announced the resignation of Dr. Nicolai Sokoloff as director of the Federal music project.

Dies Agape At Testimony In Secret Quiz

Chairman Says Facts 'Leave Us With Mouths Hanging Open'

By the Associated Press.

In the utmost secrecy, the House Committee on Un-American Activities began taking sworn testimony yesterday on an undisclosed subject which Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, said "leaves even us with our mouths hanging open."

The members were pledged to strict silence about the new turn of the committee's work and Dies would say only that it related to anti-racial and other propaganda and Communist activities.

It was learned that the matter concerned "tips and leads" that a wealthy businessman was financing a campaign of racial and class distinction which already has reached into high Army and Navy circles.

Identities Guarded

Six witnesses—their identities carefully guarded—were heard. Some were kept hidden from others. Several were escorted from one committee room to another by way of narrow ledges five stories above the ground so they would not be seen.

It was learned that the committee undertook the hearings yesterday with the approval of Speaker Bankhead and Representative Rayburn (Democrat), of Texas, majority leader. Rayburn said "this is one thing I can't talk about."

"This is so highly important that we can't tell you a thing now," Dies told newspapermen. "We'd like to co-operate but we just can't do it.

"We are going to make a very thorough investigation and may make public a transcript of the testimony or a report on it. Manifestly we don't want to use the names of innocent individuals and we won't want to smear any one and then find there is no basis for it."

Mosquitoes Hoping to Dine On Royal Blood Will Fail

It may seem incidental in the big program of arrangements, but it is unlikely that England's Majesty will be bothered by the buzz of mosquitoes during their visit here.

Washington's mosquito fighters, functioning under the District Government, have installed a mosquito trap on the White House grounds and across the breadth of the city are opening the annual drive calculated to take every buzz from every night.

The trap on the White House grounds is similar to perhaps a dozen in other places here. It is a shapely, green device with a light to attract mosquitoes, a small suction fan to draw them in and a clock to register the mosquito's arrival.

Through this contraption, it is determined from what direction the mosquitoes are wafted into the trap and the species. Obviously, it tells the density of mosquitoes in the area. The catch is sent to the Public Health Laboratories for classification; the fighters begin looking for stagnant pools.

These they oil, or drain, where possible. Last year between May and October, when the fight is on, 36,028 gallons of oil were used, much of it on the 12,000 catch basins in Washington. Elsewhere it was sprayed on stangnant pools difficult of drainage. It was sprayed on the marshes from the mosquito service's motorboats. Oil is sprayed once every seven days on the catch basins.

Functioning under the District Sewer Department, with J. W. Batson in charge, the service uses some WPA labor, such as in improving streams where mosquitoes might breed once every seven days.

Last year they were called to the White House where mosquitoes were causing a bother. The trouble was quickly spotted in an ordinarily unnoticeable puddle.

The mosquito service wants to be at the public's call. But the public can do much, it was said. A lookout should be kept for stale water on the premises. But if the buzz becomes unbearable, dial National 6,000, ask for extension 573 and then it becomes the mosquitoes' lookout.

D. C. Leaders Open Vacation Safety Drive

Campaign Designed To Safeguard City's School Children

A campaign against summer traffic accidents designed to safeguard the city's vacationing school children was planned yesterday by a group of civic and municipal leaders at a meeting in Wesley Hall, 1703 K street northwest.

To prevent repetition of last year's toll of youngsters, the group—headed by Miss Sibyl Baker, District playground supervisor, and Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the American Automobile Association—appealed to parents to "set an example" by themselves practicing caution and instilling in young minds the necessity for constant alertness on crowded streets.

The meeting was attended by all policemen assigned to schoolboy patrol and safety education work. Plans for the movement will cover each of the city's recreation centers and playgrounds.

Supporting the program at yesterday's first conference was Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown, Dr. Thomas Gosling, assistant superintendent of schools; Edwin S. Hege, chairman of the safety education and promotion committee of the traffic advisory council; Harry Wender, Federation of Citizens safety leader; Inspector William E. Holmes, police traffic supervisor; Mrs. Elizabeth Peeples, of the Community Center; John Nolan, jr., of the Park and Planning Commission, and Lewis R. Barrett, District co-ordinator of recreation.

WASHINGTON WOMEN LOUDLY PRAISE THIS GRAND NEW BREAD!

Women are the best judges of how food should taste. You, yourself taste much of the food you serve your family before you serve it. And you keep the men out of your kitchen!

That's what I did with hundreds of women. We tested by tasting bread after bread after bread. Finally we women found one that exceeded our highest expectations. That's my new bread.

Mind you, we kept the men out! This is a woman's recipe. Your choice just as surely as it was ours. You know what that means—your whole family will love it. (Makes grand toast, too!)

And now our other woman's idea. Every loaf is dated with today's date after it comes from the oven. So every loaf is deliciously tender-fresh.

Try a loaf of my new bread today. I believe we women have put something over on the men! On sale Fresh at all Sanitary Food Stores.

Press Advised On Royal Visit By Sir Ronald

King Will Make No Speeches, Queen Won't Do Any Shopping

Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, broke the rule of a life-time yesterday in holding a press conference to get the public impression straight about the visit to this country of his sovereign rulers.

They come here to strengthen the ties of friendship with this country; the King will make no speeches here, but will pronounce a short toast at the state dinner in the White House; the Queen will not do any shopping; "it is inconceivable that the King would not have conversations with Secretary Hull; it was not certain whether the program follows the express desires of the King or was arranged by others," he said.

But it was toward Sir Ronald, P. C., G. C. M. G., K. C. B., and C. V. O., to whom the nearly two-score reporters and photographers reacted. His excellency was in what the British would describe as a state of concern—high concern, you know—and he said "I don't pretend to enjoy this."

Accommodations Beastly

It was the beastly accommodations—that's it—that bothered; for the Embassy is not equipped for press conferences of any proportion. Really, it was a matter of having the press stand in the reception hall, with Sir Ronald conducting his conference from the rounded stairway.

Then, the presence of newspaperwomen was a concern. Said Sir Ronald: "I didn't know any ladies were going to be here. The things that interest them I am really not competent to speak about."

The flash bulbs set off by the photographers were something again. His Excellency jumped nervously every time one went off. He suggested that this phase of his first press conference be concluded before he went on with his statements. His Excellency said he had nothing to say, but would gladly answer such questions as were asked. From these, facts came as follows:

The royal visit primarily had been arranged as one to Canada and "the visit to the United States was not at the fore at that time in the minds of the King and Queen," he said. But once the visit to Canada was assured, its extension to the United States was the most natural thing in the world, he said.

"Political Purpose"

"The purpose of the visit here is not primarily political, although it is perfectly obvious that when the King visits a foreign country part of his purpose is to improve the ties of friendship as far as he possibly can. There is no more political purpose in the visit than that."

Asked why the King was not placed in touch with more average Americans, the Ambassador said, "There is such an awful lot of them." And to a question if American men should bow from the waist to the King, the Ambassador said: "I think they might do what I do when I meet the President. I behave in a suitable and respectful manner. I would certainly give a bow. Whether it comes from my waist or not, I don't know."

The Ambassador is said to have summoned the press because of complaints that only persons in the millionaire class would be invited to the garden party.

Many Are Called, Few Are Chosen

The feminine reporters kept digging in on the embassy garden event, scheduled for June 8, at which officials and social notables to the number of 1,300 will be present.

"The garden party is just like heaven, you know. Some are taken and some are not," Sir Ronald said.

In explaining why the King and Queen would be received in the rotunda of Congress instead of the legislative halls, the Ambassador stated: "The King cannot go to his own Parliament except under very carefully laid down rules. This is owing to certain incidents in history of which you know. The Parliament does not seem to have forgotten them. Because of the same sort of analogy, the King is hesitant about paying visits to other parliaments in an official manner."

2½ Million Cheer Rulers in Montreal

Religious United

Britishers traveling with the royal couple have been pleasantly amazed at the fervent greeting that the Catholics have given the young King-Emperor who also is head of the Church of England.

Rolling down from Quebec today in their magnificent royal train, the King and Queen could see groups of Catholic school children gathered along the way at little towns, always watched over by their priests and nuns and always frantically waving tiny Union Jacks.

Here in Montreal this afternoon, in the Montreal baseball stadium, 75,000 Catholic school children—most of them French Canadians—serenaded the King and Queen with "Dieu Sauve le Roi" and the inevitable waving of flags.

From this stadium the King and Queen, traveling in an open car with the bullet-proof glass around them, moved at the usual 8-mile-an-hour pace to the stadium of McGill University, where 15,000 Protestant school children went through the same ceremony.

All Faiths at Banquet

Tonight at a civic dinner given for Their Majesties in the Windsor Hotel, the spiritual shepherds of all groups were represented, among them being Archbishop Georges Gauthier (Catholic), Bishop Arthur Carlyle (Anglican), and Rabbi Abrahamovitch (Hebrew).

Though no less than 1,000 guests were seated at this banquet, they were but a small fraction of the more than 25,000 who applied for places. Members of the banquet committee declined to make the guest list public; they said its publication might cause hard feelings among those who could not be invited.

The committee's nonpublication hopes were blasted, however, when the first edition of tomorrow morning's Gazette appeared on the streets with a list of the guests.

On the way to the banquet, the King and Queen, who had returned to the royal train to dress, rode through crowds in some places 20 deep.

The Montreal newspapers said it was the greatest day in the city's 300 years; and, for matter, in the history of Canada. And judging from the splendor of the decorations, the size and ecstasy of the crowds, it was all of that.

Americans will cheer a President one year and hoot him out of office the next. The emotion of the Canadians is not that of Americans for a President. Americans can best understand it, perhaps, if they think how they themselves feel when they see Old Glory unfurled in the breeze and hear the Star-Spangled Banner played. The King is a symbol, a living flag.

King Works Hard

He happens to be a well-behaved and personable young man who works hard—very, very hard—to be a good symbol.

He also happens to have a lovely Queen and two young daughters' one of whom already has England thinking of a new Elizabethan era.

All of this day and evening, and it promises to be true of every day and evening through the Washington visit and after, Queen Elizabeth has left a trail of admiration and love after her, a remark that in no way is a reflection on the King.

The Queen has a friendliness, backed up by a vivid loveliness, that makes a tremendous impression.

"She's a pip" remarked a 12-year-old school boy in the McGill University Stadium this afternoon.

"Oh, she's charming," said a waitress who rushed out of the Windsor Hotel grill to catch a glimpse.

More and Bigger Diamonds

When the King and Queen stepped from the crown-embossed train this morning, the Queen was wearing a sky-blue ensemble with a matching hat with a white fox scarf to protect her from the chill.

Tonight at the banquet she wore a white satin gown embroidered in crystal, made with a 2-foot train. The accompanying jewelry was different from that of last night, but no less dazzling.

She wore another tiara, with larger diamonds and a double strand of diamonds as large as marbles. She also had a white fox cape, and carried, but did not wear, a pair of white gloves.

George Changes Once

Sartorially His Majesty had a fairly easy day of it, changing only once. When he and the Queen toured the city, he wore his admiral's uniform, but with an undress white hat. His only change was to the white tie and tails for the banquet.

While Their Majesties were dining, bands paraded the gaudily decorated streets playing "Pack Up Your Troubles," "Tipperary," "Long, Long Trail," and other old songs of the World War.

Certainly, though, the "crisis King" and his Queen must have had a chance to forget tormented Europe and the "next war" since they have been in this greatest of their dominions.

The next stop is Ottawa, the Dominion capital, where Their Majesties will leave the French atmosphere and encounter a bit of old England. They arrive there at 11 a. m. for a two-and-a-half-day stay.

Girl Bows, Topples, Is Aided by Queen

Montreal, Quebec, May 18 (INS).—Montreal, surprised and delighted by the prettiness of its queen, rang tonight with a charming tale of her kindness—of her efforts to save a young girl from embarrassment.

When one of the town belles was presented to their Majesties, she made so deep a curtsy that she fairly swept the ground. At the crucial point her ankle turned, placing the young lady in an awkward position.

It was the Queen who put out her own hand and lifted the blushing girl back onto her feet.

A Significant Defeat

The Senate defeat of the bill authorizing construction of a Florida ship canal is primarily significant as a vote against spending, although the cost of the enterprise is only one of the numerous reasons why this project deserved to be defeated.

Time and again efforts have been made to secure Congressional approval of the plan, despite unfavorable reports of expert engineers, the lack of interest shown by shipping interests, and the objections raised by residents of Florida who fear their underground water supplies will be drained away.

Point by point Senator Vandenberg, leader of the opposition, refuted the arguments advanced by advocates of the canal. He also called attention to the fact that the project was launched without Congressional sanction by using a few million dollars of the WPA lump sum appropriation placed at the disposal of the President. The subsequent attempt of the Chief Executive to put pressure upon Congress to authorize completion of the project was rightly resented as an attempt to usurp Congressional prerogatives by indirect means. Even if there were no other compelling reasons for turning down the canal plan Congress might well hesitate to approve a project it has repeatedly declined to consider.

However, it is not necessary to recall old grievances or even to prove that the canal is economically unjustified in order to explain the adverse vote of the Senate. Senator Vandenberg really summed up the situation when he said: "I assert that no Senator who votes two or three hundred million dollars to any project which is not pressingly needed can ever again lay the slightest claim to interest in either economy or conservation; and when the project is not only not needed, but is not even wanted by most of those presumed to be served by it, the sheer waste of two or three hundred million dollars becomes an insufferable affront to the public welfare."

That is indeed the basic issue, as Senator Vandenberg asserted, and it is probable that most of the large group of Democrats who joined the Republicans to defeat the bill share his views.

The Immortal Ritz

The poets by and large have taken immortality for granted. "I shall never utterly die," said Horace complacently. What he meant, of course, was that his poetry, and hence his memory, was imperishable. In words that are almost a paraphrase of Horace's, Shakespeare wrote that thereby indicating that he was bestowing some of his own guaranteed immortality on the subject of the sonnet, whose identity, by the way, is still a matter of great controversy among the critics.

> Not marble nor the gilded monuments
> Of princes shall outlive this powerful rhyme,

Evidently there is a certain truth in what the poets say. Still, the kind of immortality they have earned for themselves seems rather limited compared with the kind of immortality bestowed by the caprice of language. When the 2,000th birthday anniversary of old H. Q. Flaccus occurred about 4 years ago only a handful of Latinists bothered to notice it. And certainly the name of Shakespeare cannot stir up half or a tenth of the emotions aroused by the name of the obscure geographer for whom this continent was absent-mindedly named. The question of whether Shakespeare was Shakespeare or another fellow is nothing compared to the question of what is American and what un-American.

The late Cesar Ritz, whose widow is now visiting Washington, is a recent instance of this neologistic immortality. The descriptive epithet "ritzy" now seems as firmly embedded in the language as "bowdlerized," "machiavellian," "chauvinistic," "lynch" or "boycott." And it is a far pleasanter word than any of them.

It is possible, even probable, that the word "ritzy" will remain long after the Ritz Hotels, wonderful as they are, are no more remembered than the courts of Jamshyd. Who now can tell the original significance of "the real Mullarkey" or "the genuine McCoy?" Who could undertake to write the biography of Hebe Jebes?

The immortality of the poets is personal. The other is a kind of nirvana.

The White Paper

The latest British White Paper marks the penultimate stage in the liquidation by the British government of those obligations which it assumed when it issued the Balfour Declaration in 1917 and which it renewed, two and a half years later, when it accepted the mandate for Palestine.

The Balfour Declaration declared that the British government viewed "with favor the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

Later it was argued that this pledge conflicted with that said to have been given the Arabs by the British High Commissioner to Egypt, Sir Henry MacMahon, and by other British agents. This MacMahon has denied and his published correspondence with the Sherif of Mecca, according to the White Paper, is hostile to any such theory. At any rate, it cannot be denied that by far the largest part of the Arabian peninsula has been turned over to the Arabs and is today governed by them.

Furthermore, many Englishmen who played a highly responsible role in British affairs at the time the Balfour Declaration was issued, actually saw the National Home pledge as leading, sooner or later, to the establishment of a Jewish state and gave that idea their warm indorsement. "Our wish," said Lord Robert (now Viscount) Cecil, "is that Arabian countries shall be for Arabs, Armenia for the Armenians and Judea for the Jews."

Almost from the beginning, however, the actual and implied obligations of the Balfour Declaration began to be whittled away. The Zionist experiment so hopefully launched and so universally approved, not only in Great Britain but in many other parts of the world as well, was from the outset surrounded by difficulties.

They increased as Arab nationalistic sentiment developed, as the Near East and the Mohammedan world became an increasingly important factor in British calculations and as outside forces found it useful and convenient to roil the already troubled waters of Holy Land antagonisms.

Despite these difficulties, however, the Zionist experiment went forward. Palestine, which had been wasted and denuded in the course of the centuries, began to blossom like a rose as a result of the tremendous efforts to create the Jewish National Home. And these efforts, far from hurting the Palestinian Arabs, enormously benefited them. Yet in making Palestine a rich prize the Zionists also increased the difficulties which stand in the way of the fulfillment of their dreams.

From time to time since the end of the World War, serious Arab outbreaks have occurred. Toward them the British government has shown a strange indifference. It was well over a year after the outbreak of the 1936 riots, for instance, that sufficient additional troops were sent to Palestine to cope with the situation. Even then some of the ringleaders, notably the Grand Mufti, one of the most extreme of Arab Nationalist leaders, were so poorly guarded after their apprehension that they easily managed to make their escape to carry on their incitements and intrigues from outside the Holy Land.

In desperation, a Royal Commission recommended and the British government approved a plan to partition Palestine into a tiny Jewish and a larger Arab state, with Great Britain continuing to hold a mandate for the holy cities and a corridor to the sea. That plan met with little approval. It was bitterly opposed by Arabs and by a considerable element among the Jews. It met with a very lukewarm reception in the British Parliament and was critically viewed by the League Mandates Commission. This idea has now been dropped.

Instead, the British government now proposes the independence of Palestine in ten years, with Jewish immigration to be permitted only during the next five. In that time only 75,000 Jews are to be admitted, a paltry number in comparison with Palestine's demonstrated absorptive capacity and completely out of line with the desperate needs of the Jews of Central and Eastern Europe. To them Palestine is today, one of the few places of refuge that remain.

The British White Paper rejects the Arab demand that Palestine be transformed into an Arab state, like Transjordan or Irak or Saudi Arabia. The new state, according to the terms of the White Paper, will be neither Arab nor Jewish but with full equality vouchsafed all inhabitants alike. Yet with the Jewish total limited to 30 per cent the British hope that independence will mean peace and Arab-Jewish co-operation may prove only wishful thinking.

At any other time the repudiation of solemn obligations undertaken in the past would have been tragic. It is particularly so now. The mistakes of 22 years cannot be rectified by renunciation of responsibility. In seeking to cut the Gordian knot of Palestine, Great Britain may only make it tighter, and in the process strangle one of the most idealistic experiments of our times.

Case Histories

The case method was effectively applied to the study of tax problems by Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., when he testified before the Temporary National Economic Committee on Wednesday.

Mr. Young pointed out that $192,000,000 of the $322,000,000 of capital investment of the company has been provided out of earnings, while $92,000,000 has been obtained through cash investments either in the form of stock subscriptions or purchases of bonds later converted into stock. He naturally drew attention to the evils of undistributed profits taxation which interferes with the reinvestment of earnings and thus retards the development and expansion of new industries.

The history of the General Electric also provided Mr. Young with some excellent arguments against the capital gains tax. Had this kind of taxation been in operation in the nineties, it is doubtful whether the company could have survived the panic of 1893. Moreover, Mr. Young thinks it "probably could not have obtained such large subscriptions to its capital stock after the turn of the century."

In thus applying generalized criticisms to the company with which his name has been so long associated, Mr. Young has struck a particularly telling blow on behalf of needed tax reforms. He speaks the more forcefully because he cannot be convicted of harboring selfish designs. The General Electric is no longer in the developmental stage at which it needs to attract outside capital, or to retain earnings for expansion. It has ample liquid capital at its disposal, no capital debts; and no reason to withhold earnings from its stockholders. In short, here is another case to show that repressive business taxes injure the smaller, struggling companies, not the well-established enterprises.

In substantial accord with the views expressed by Mr. Young, Alfred P. Sloan, who was on the witness stand yesterday, also emphasized the importance of reinvesting earnings in growing industries. During an 18-year period, he stated, the General Motors Corporation has retained $490,000,000 of profit and has accumulated about $520,000,000 to cover depreciation charges. That huge sum has been plowed back into the company, and used to expand plant and equipment, to provide special tools and for other operations.

No doubt the same story could be told, with variations, by innumerable businessmen who have knowledge of the way in which American industry has been built up from within, through energy, confidence and self-denial. Success stories of this kind will, however, cease to be commonplace recitals if the inducements to take risks, and the opportunities to accumulate savings for risk-taking, are destroyed by repressive forms of taxation.

One Gland Sweet Song

In this wide-eyed world one expects a new scientific wonder to arrive daily, with the milk and the morning paper. So it may be somewhat temerarious to suggest that Dr. Serge Voronoff, experimenter in rejuvenation, is a shade too sanguine in predicting that the average span of human life will be extended to 150 years by the grafting of monkey glands. Still one cannot help, on occasion, being somewhat temerarious, can one?

Dr. Voronoff offers as evidence the fact that several notable European statesmen have taken the treatment with success. But, lacking identification, one is left in doubt. The fact may have absolutely nothing to do with the monkey tricks played on the European stage.

Assuming that the theory is correct and that the practice of grafting will become general, monkeys will have to be bred in large numbers. Then a visit to the monkey house in the zoo will cease to have its thrills. It will become the rendezvous of nonogenarians who will nudge each other and say, "There's the lad who is saving up a few extra years for me."

And the social effect of it all will be revolutionary. We shall become a nation of old folk. Already the trend is in that direction. People are living longer and the birth rate is decreasing, even without glands. Soon life as it is habitually lived will be long enough for most people. So why monkey with it?

Fathers Versus Sons

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

It is rather rare in sports for sons to follow in their fathers' footsteps. It is not only a question of inclination but of physique and aptitude as well. Uncounted are the heartaches of one-time gridiron heroes who have seen their sons grow up spindle-legged and indifferent to the possibilities of the single-wing-back formation; of tennis stars whose kids are allergic to catgut; of pole-vaulters whose offspring can't spring off a stone wall without cracking a rib.

But baseball fathers are favored; possibly because nearly every boy in America plays baseball at one time or another. Walter Peckinpaugh, son of Roger, revered by every Yankee fan of 15 years' standing, is actually considering a barnstorming tour by sons of the diamond great.

Dig Deeper

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago we heard over the radio a story which, if we should choose to interpret it spiritually, becomes arresting. Of course, thousands of people have visions and dreams—in fact, we all share in this experience—but how few, perhaps, see in them guidance or lessons to be learned.

An editor, broadcasting "news items," told the story about a woman who had a vision regarding a treasure supposed to be buried in her back yard. After digging for it for some time she uncovered—not a thing! Later on she had another vision showing her that she should dig deeper. And while she was digging this second time she found anything but a treasure, for her labors yielded broken bottles and tin cans.

Now, from the human and intellectual viewpoint, some visions seem to be ridiculous, but spiritually or, rather, mystically, there are many true visions that have a definite meaning. The ancient prophets and patriarchs knew how to search for the hidden meaning concealed in visions. They knew that a true vision does not have an outer meaning, but a deep inner significance. They would never be inclined to search in back yards, but would thoroughly enjoy searching within the depth of the human soul. It is quite in keeping with the materialistic age in which we live for people to seek material treasures only, unaware of the gems they might unearth which are latent within the human spirit. Idle Capital

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I understand that a certain party here in Washington, who is closely connected with the Government and who has had a considerable part in the determining of governmental policies in this country during the past few years, wants to know why there is so much idle capital about the country and why this capital does not go to work.

Well, if he really wants to know, why not ask the investors, the people who own this idle capital which is available for investments? Would not that be the logical thing to do? And it seems to me that it also would be a very simple thing to do—if he really wants to know.

Resistance

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have merely to think about the far-from-simple problem of nonresistance in order to realize that for this Nation of many minds to practice it with anything like the degree of unanimity necessary to make it a telling thing belongs to some distant day. We know that at some point along the increasingly intolerable course of aggression, we shall willy-nilly find ourselves fighting. This is the most elementary realism.

Admittedly, nonresistance is a priceless thing, and a thing capable, with cultivation, of endless growth, endless possibilities. But let us also realize that just as our faith as a Nation is not yet sufficient to enable us to get along without food and drink or, at least, without doctors and hospitals, policemen and jails, even so our brotherly love is not yet grown so divine that we can hope to dispense with soldiers and munitions works. Show me a nation that is successfully practicing nonresistance against crime, and I will show you a nation that might consider the logical next step, which is nonresistance against the international crime of aggression!

Different Welcome

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was interested in Mr. Folliard's article in The Post of May 7, dealing with the official greeting given President Somoza of Nicaragua.

I heartily approve of having a short parade, but I believe that a different type of welcome would not only be of greater interest to the heads of most foreign states but would have the added advantage of attracting more of the "blase" Washington populace. Could not an official greeting be planned that would help foreigners to understand and appreciate what is unique about our country, and in which as varied groups as possible would be represented, rather than just the military?

Two excellent Government projects might be used. The chorus organized by the National Capital Parks to greet the notables at the Union Station with the singing of their national anthem. Then a procession of marchers, floats, etc., would constitute the parade, illustrating the "Typical Contributions to American Industry and Culture" as depicted in "Americans All, Immigrants All" recently published by the Office of Education of the Interior Department.

The amazing variety of background from which Americans have sprung would be illustrated by showing different racial groups at work in the industries to which they have particularly contributed, as for example, the Scandinavian dairymen of Minnesota, the Chinese laborers in the gold mines of California, the Portuguese fishermen in New England. The recent Folk Festival suggests how the cultural contributions of different groups could be included to make this parade one of unusual variety, color and interest. With the help of the Government bureaus and State societies, would not such a parade be feasible and worth a trial?

"Treacherous Minority"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Pegler's column on the "Treacherous Minority" in The Post of May 12 certainly belies the title of his column, "Fair Enough." May I suggest that he omit the "Fair" and warn prospective readers by the single word, "Enough."

Pegler may be privileged to disapprove of any political creed that he may desire, but when he repudiates all sympathy toward the Communists he goes too far because in so doing he closes the door to the acceptance of many projects that Americans should inaugurate by the token of possessing a government by and for all people.

American democracy can well afford to regard those countries where there are factors of social development in common with our own, and Pegler cannot deny that Russia deserves more sympathy than does Nazi Germany. I cite only one example that was recently called to my attention by an eminent Chilean.

He discussed the lead that his country and Soviet Russia have taken in the field of public health, and the conclusion to be drawn from what he said was that any administration in this country should be tolerant of such progressive ideas and the country from which they come.

For Moderation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Washington the Beautiful" is, I know, famous as the "depression boom" town. Erudite bums who get around will tell you there's no depression here.

But I wonder if intelligent members of carpenters' locals don't feel a bit guilty asking $13 for a seven-hour day. And they're going to strike if they don't get it!

Perhaps this is just some of the superadvancement advocated by the New Deal, which, as we all know, despises the labor vote. Maybe, too, it is just a start. The real Utopia will come a few years from now with $15 demanded for a six-hour day!

Contrast living expenses today with the '20's: butter, 25 cents, against 50 cents; sliced bacon, 25 cents, versus 60 cents; steak and beef twice the present cost; rents lower, due to losses taken by capital putters-up, not to the inordinately low wages of the '20's. Clothes are now 50 per cent cheaper.

And in those decadent '20's your present servant drew down wages of $8.40 to $10—my sense of reasonableness rebelled at any scale over that, and still does—and saved $6,000 in five years, without half trying.

Who is going to buy the houses put up under the proposed fancy wages? Millions of depression-made millionaires we all hear about or the middle third seldom spoken of by Roosevelt and fellow miraclemen, from whom taxes are wrenched?

These demands will further reduce the amount of carpenter work on each unit. The bunk about excessive wages to a favored few ushering in general prosperity is one of the angles of political bunk exploded during the last painful years. Why this mutton-headed failure to recognize existence of 20,000,000 of unemployed in this country? This is a plea for moderation. If not forthcoming, it's the demanders who'll find themselves the losers.

"Moral Rearmament"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would be remiss indeed if I did not send you a note of thanks and appreciation for the unusual and timely editorial, "Moral Rearmament," which appeared in The Post on May 16.

Recently one of your editorials was quoted widely, and here is another that should be quoted from pulpit, in classroom, in office and above all, in the family circle.

Washington, May 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Moral Rearmament," in The Post of May 16 is worthy of high commendation. It has been read with gratification by some of my co-workers in the Treasury Department, who, upon hearing of the program of moral rearmament for the first time recently, ejaculated, "Why hasn't this been given more publicity? Certainly it is the only answer."

All of us look forward to finding such news given increasingly more prominence in The Post.

Third Term

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I understand that in the new $45,000,000 battleships which are to be constructed for the Navy there will be no facilities for keeping bait fresh. This seems to dispose of the talk that the President wishes a third term. FRANK N. NAY.

The Post Impressionist

Who Said Semantics?

I AM a fugitive from co-ordination.

Or, rather, I wish I could be. My flight is doomed to failure, however, because, as a reporter, I cover meetings where co-ordination is the sole topic of discussion.

Early in every reporter's novitiate comes the realization that at any given meeting where the word "co-ordination" has been mentioned three times he may rise, leave the room and phone his city editor that he will cover the event in two paragraphs—two more than it deserves as a news item.

Delvers into the folklore of American administration have come to the correct conclusion that "co-ordination" is a fundamentally meaningless word, accompanied, however, by a series of connotations which make it a delight to use by anyone with nothing else to say.

Pompous, jaw-filling, undefinable, it is used to describe an as yet unformulated program or a nonexisting, nebulous objective.

For example:

The Carnarsie Burrow, No. 14, Amalgamated Hibernators of America, hears a report from its child-guidance committee. The committee, hastily routed out by the chairman the night before, after six months' inactivity, has no idea of what it is supposed to be doing, has not done it, and has no intention of ever doing it. Its chairman, therefore, reports the following night that the child-guidance committee "has taken significant steps to co-ordinate its program with the broad, fundamental policies of the parent organization and looks forward to a marked advancement of the program decided upon at the last meeting."

Significantly, the word is never used in the past tense. No one ever reports that anything has been co-ordinated. It is always that "the next move is to co-ordinate the activities" or "we must strive for co-ordination of past developments into an integrated whole."

"Integration," of course, is a word in the same class with "co-ordination" and means the same thing, if any. Full of sound and fury, the two are indispensable to persons and organizations which signify nothing.

To prove the point, one needs only mention a former prominent Government official's supremely sterile press conferences. For six long and unavailing years, when the most diligent research could discover not the slightest vestige of activity by his agency, he dropped the words "co-ordination" and "integration" as often as a debutante says "but definitely." Asked how he was going to contribute to recovery, the official would reply, "By co-ordinating the program of the organization with the national economy's basic needs."

Asked what progress he could report from some new and highly publicized venture, he would note "the integration of the study's aims into a well-ballasted policy co-ordinated with the national objectives."

A "well-ballasted" program or policy was one of the official's favorite terms. Another, of wider currency, was "implemented." Both deserve permanent niches in the American temple of deceptive euphemism.

To "implement," in that sense, is apparently nothing more than a precious synonym for "equip." When someone reports a tangible achievement in public, however, and says that his program has been "equipped" with the necessary powers or tools to make it workable, he will proceed to specify, in detail, just what those tools or powers are. If, on the other hand, he reports that his program has been or will be "implemented," the matter ends there. He has actually said that he is up a stump, either through laziness or ignorance, and that he intends to do nothing more about it save keep up appearances—mainly with the use of more empty verbosity.

Another favorite among New Dealers, social workers and luncheon clubs is "follow through," which, if it has any meaning at all, signifies "continue." If a speaker says he will continue to work on his given activity, there is some small chance he may actually do so. If he promises, however, to "follow through," the listener may securely translate "forget about it."

'Surely' no other language can boast such satisfying words. To coordinate, implement, integrate, ballast, follow through—fine words, fine ideas, connoting big-time stuff, heavy thinking, lofty aims, well thought out plans of action. They indicate that the speaker is making a strong stand but they avoid the embarrassment of saying where, or how, or when, or why, or who, or what. They commit the utterer to nothing; they leave the listener satisfied. They have no kick-back.

Their triumph is to camouflage the nonexistent.

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

Scrap Iron

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of April 29 you print a letter from Henry D. Baker, of Durham, N. C., in which he reiterates the misconception that American scrap iron is used for making explosive or shrapnel shells by the Japanese for use in China.

It is true that small pieces of steel are used in some shells, but these pieces are not scrap. To use irregular bits of scrap would so unbalance a shell that it could not be fired.

Scrap is used to make steel, and in the process it completely loses its identity. The dealer in scrap can no more predestinate its use than the farmer in North Dakota can specify that his wheat shall be used to feed American children rather than foreign soldiers.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Press And Royalty

IT WILL BE worth remembering when the British King and Queen come to this country that they are not coming to visit the American newspapers or the reporters or trained seals assigned to the story and that the press has no social rights or prerogatives in the matter.

It is the job of the press to cover the story just as it is the job of the railroadmen to run the train on which those tourists ride, and there is no obligation on the King or Queen to take any journalists on their laps or invite them to pull up chairs and shoot olive pits with them. They don't owe any consideration to the social ambitions or pretensions of any publishers or any wives thereof or of any staff or syndicate journalist. However sensitive or self-important, therefore, any reprisal on them in the form of a "bad press" for failure to propitiate the press will smack of blackmail and hurt the papers more than them.

No Need to Fawn On Working Press

IT SHOULDN'T be necessary for anyone to fawn on the press or its individual representatives in order to escape deliberately nasty publicity, and the fact that such is notoriously the case in the journalism of Hollywood and the so-called Broadway sector is a reproach which ought to be localized or abolished and certainly not extended. Insidiously, though not quietly, there has developed a small group of personally vain and hypersensitive poseurs and poseuses in the newspaper business who regard themselves as persons of great celebrity and, in arrogant ignorance of the first principles of journalism, require flattering attention as the price of praise or forbearance and avenge with scurrilous innuendoes any manifestation of the contempt which they deserve.

The journalistic orgies of the Hauptmann trial were a revolting demonstration of this new method of personal exploitation at the expense of the story and of justice itself, and the same bug has infected—although much less flagrantly—the fourth estate of Washington under the New Deal.

Newspaper People Should Keep Distance

NEWSPAPER PEOPLE ought to keep their distance socially from the objects of their professional coverage and neither seek nor permit themselves to be drawn into a zone of intimacy in which impartial reporting could be construed as retaliation for personal slight or payment for social favor. Mrs. Roosevelt's neighborly warmth was a sharp relief from the bleak austerity of her immediate predecessor in that which she appears to regard as a public office, but, as a result, in some cases individuals have been made to seem rude if not hostile to the Administration who only insisted on keeping their distance and their perspective and choosing their own society.

Nobody knows beyond a guess why the King and Queen are coming here at this time, he with much work undone at the office, and she with a sinkful of dishes, so to speak, but outwardly, least, their visit is purely social. Thus the British Embassy's failure to invite the whole Washington corps of journalists to the garden party for their nibs is no calamity to the press and shouldn't be one to them.

Party In Garden Will Not Be News

REPORTERS, thank God, are not society, and those who think they are are neither reporters nor society, but inept amateurs who don't speak the language, on the professional side, and climbers, lobbyists or broken-down aristocrats, on the social side.

And the party in the garden will not be news unless some appointee's wife tries to pick a brawl with the Queen over the debt or Bunker Hill or some buck New Dealer with a snootful of the embassy's best thinks the occasion appropriate to sing the one beginning "The Minstrels Sing of a Jovial King; a Wonderful King Was He." Either one would be a faux pas, causing consternation, but no reporter invited as a guest under the social obligations binding on a guest could write the piece without sacrifice of personal honor, so it were best for the press to scout around outside and obtain the news from some invitee when the butlers begin to heave them over the garden wall.

This exclusion is to the advantage of the press in another way, too, for this will be one time when no man can say he was a reporter—what else did you expect?—who staggered out with a quart in each pocket or pushed Lady Agatha into the fountain.

Optometrists' Fight With Stores Called National in Scope

Members of the District of Columbia Optometry Board and representatives of stores engaged in the "corporate practice" of optometry will continue their testimony today before a House sub-committee

Harry Cohn, representing the American Optometrical Association, will be among the witnesses who will appear to oppose "the practice of optometry" in department and jewelry stores. He declared yesterday that the quarrel between the "store and professional" optometrists is not localized in Washington but is Nation-wide.

Argument before the committee yesterday did not touch on merits of the two opposing bills before the committee but was between the opposing groups on their rights to raise money and employ counsel to push their respective claims.

New Term For Quezon

By Vicente Albano Pacis

The Philippine Re-election Problem

Manila.

IT SEEMS that after several years of quiet agitation for the re-election of President Manuel L. Quezon, of the Philippine Commonwealth, in spite of the categorical prohibition of the Philippine constitution, Philippine public opinion has been so crystallized that the matter is ready for presentation to Washington, where refusal to have the constitution amended will readily appear as an unmitigated act of thumbing down the Filipino people.

The boom for Mr. Quezon's re-election started soon after the inauguration of the Commonwealth, but Quezon himself threw cold water on it when he announced that he was not a candidate to succeed himself. It was almost definitely squelched when reports, never authoritatively denied, reached Manila to the effect that the Washington authorities frowned upon the idea of amending the Philippine constitution so soon and especially for the benefit, at least apparently, of a single individual. When the reports became current in Manila, President Quezon even more categorically declared that he was not the least bit interested in another term.

AT ABOUT this juncture a long-range program of expanding the Malacanan estate, the residence of the President was started. It included the renovation and expansion of the palace, the conversion of a large area across the Pasig River into a park as part of the Presidential estate, and the construction of various outhouses, including the guest houses, playgrounds and a massive garage, which at this writing is about to be completed. One day one of the political leaders with Presidential aspirations was a Malacanan luncheon guest and, being more or less in intimate relations with the President, ventured to fish.

"Judging from the permanent improvements you are carrying out here," he remarked with a twinkle in his eyes, "it looks as if you intend to stay here very long!"

The President, who holds the championship record in the islands for ability to get out of tight spots, simply replied, "I am preparing all this for you fellows who will come after me."

The Philippine constitution expressly prohibits the re-election of the President but gives him a term of six years. This feature was pointed to at the time of the drafting of the constitution as an improvement over the American Constitution. It was explained that a chief executive invariably looks forward to a second term and, in doing so, utilizes the latter half of his first term for mending his political fences. The Philippine provision, it was claimed, completely dissociates the Philippine President from politics.

FOLLOWING the spirit of this prohibition, President Quezon soon after his inauguration announced his retirement from politics. He placed himself outside of his party and refused to meddle in the election held two years after his inauguration for provincial and municipal officials. When, late last year, the election for members of the Assembly was held, however, he openly participated in the campaign on the excuse that he was interested in getting a legislative body that would co-operate with the executive. In effect, a 100 per cent Quezon Assembly was elected.

Since the Assembly has always been called a Quezon Assembly, its leaders, Speaker Yulo and Floor Leader Paredes, have announced that it will not take the complete initiative to amend the constitution. The constitution provides that it may be amended by the Assembly or by a constituent convention called by the Assembly for the purpose, the proposed amendment in either case to be approved or disapproved at a referendum to take place during a regular election. The only general election to take place before the Presidential term expires is that for provincial and municipal officials in 1940. Before then, the convention must be called and the amendment proposed. It is predicted that the proposed amendments will eventually multiply to include the establishment of a Senate, thus also discarding the unicameralism which, at the time the President of the United States was to act on the constitution, was also pointed out as one more improvement over other constitutions.

ARGUMENTS for President Quezon's re-election are that the people demand it generally; that the years 1942-1948 will be the most critical period of the Commonwealth, since the American export taxes will be applied on Philippine products; that the constitutional prohibition is a sort of "squinting" provision, meant more for the period of the republic, since it provides for six-year terms, whereas the remaining Commonwealth term is only for four years; that Quezon is admittedly the best Filipino leader and must, therefore, be mustered in when the country cannot afford to take chances. The open and systematic campaign for Quezon's re-election was started by Messrs. Yule and Parades and the DMHM newspapers, a syndicate friendly to Quezon.

Arguments advanced against Quezon's re-election are that to do so would be to admit that the Filipinos lack tried and experienced leaders; that to amend the constitution for Quezon would be to predicate such a fundamental popular act on a single person; that to do so would be to interrupt the development of Philippine constitutionalism; that it will constitute a bad and dangerous precedent, giving a President a means to perpetuate himself in power.

THERE IS NO doubt, however, unless President Quezon himself stops the Assembly from taking the initiative, that the amendment or amendments will be proposed, either by the Assembly or a special convention and approved by the people overwhelmingly.

U. S. to Attack Price Checks On Building

Murphy Announces Drive to Break Up Materials Trusts

Attorney General Murphy yesterday announced that the Justice Department proposes to "attack" unlawful "price raising restraints of trade" in the building industry which are "an unsupportable burden on the public and act as a brake on the general recovery of business."

The attroney general asserted at his press conference that the Justice Department has been investigating practices affecting home building.

Some situations related to home building supplies are "quite scandalous," he said. He added that the department's survey would concentrate upon areas "where the most good can be achieved." He mentioned New York, Chicago, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Detroit, St. Louis and Cleveland.

Statement of Policy

The announcement of the proposed "attack" was contained in a statement by the Department of Justice on anti-trust policy. It said, "the purpose of this statement is not to announce a new policy, but, if possible, to make the position of the Government in respect to the anti-trust laws better understood.

"While it is the aim of the department, so far as its facilities permit, to prosecute every substantial violation of the law that is brought to its attention, it will not be content with sporadic prosecution of individual or isolated cases.

"Where it finds, for example, that the production or distribution of a particular commodity, like milk or housing materials, is being adversely affected by practices which it deems contrary to the anti-trust laws, it will be the policy of the department to include in a single proceeding all the groups and individuals whose illegal activities affect or contribute to the situation that needs to be remedied."

New Program In Making

By Ernest K. Lindley

Utilizing Vast Savings

STORIES about a new Government spending and investment program have begun to appear on the front pages of the newspapers. No such program bears the imprimatur of the White House—as yet, at least.

A few New Dealers have begun to talk to newspapermen about plans they have been discussing for months, even years. This talk is not primarily connected with the failure of the generally anticipated spring business recovery to materialize. It is preparation for 1940 and later.

The economic disappointments of the spring are blamed on the European crisis by most New Deal economists—and in that judgment they, for once, seem to be in agreement with an impressive number of their colleagues in Wall Street. Economists in the Administration are, on the whole, moderately optimistic about the business outlook for the rest of this year and for next spring. They are thinking chiefly about what will be needed after next spring: not only during the politically important summer and fall of 1940, but during the ensuing years.

Aim At Moment Is Chiefly Educational

WHAT THEY are trying to work toward is a consistent economic program for the United States during the fifth decade of the twentieth century. Their aim at the moment is primarily educational.

Their most ambitious educational effort is the study of savings and investment on which the Temporary National Economic Committee—the "monopoly" investigation—is now holding hearings. This is intended partly for the general public, but also for Congress and for some of the top people in the Administration, including the Secretary of the Treasury—and the President himself.

It has always been difficult to get the President to think in economic terms. He thinks primarily in political and moral terms. Concerning economic recovery in this country he has been almost consistently overoptimistic.

The economic views of Henry Morgenthau, jr., have been thoroughly orthodox except for the faith in monetary manipulation which he imbibed from the now almost-forgotten Prof. Warren. An excellent administrator and a man of high principles and fine sympathies, the Secretary of the Treasury has done next to nothing to develop and educate the public to the kind of financial program which most of the New Dealers have come to regard as necessary. In the last several months he has listened attentively at a few private educational sessions. Some of the New Dealers think he is beginning to catch on to their ideas.

Two Reasons Hinted For Stagnant Capital

THE NEW DEALERS have made some progress at the White House, also. It was reflected in the President's message of Tuesday, focusing attention on the TNEC hearings. As he said, the major problem of the TNEC is to ascertain "why a large part of our vast reservoir of money and savings have remained idle in stagnant pools."

The President did not anticipate the answer. But he suggested that there were two principal reasons. One is that we have left the era of rapid expansion in private enterprise and entered upon an era of more gradual growth in which private industry will need less new capital than it has needed in earlier decades. The other is that there are leaks and frictions in the operation of the investment market.

The prevailing New Deal thought is that the difficulty lies only partly with the machinery of the investment market. But where it differs from orthodox economic thought is in the belief that the more important and more enduring difficulty is the fact that the national savings—the combined savings of individuals and corporations—exceed by far the need of private industry for new capital. Believing that, they argue that either the total volume of national savings must be cut down or else the savings which are left unused by private industry must be used by the Government for investments of the type which private enterprise cannot or will not undertake.

Half-Hearted Effort To Solve Problem

THE ROOSEVELT Administration has made a half-hearted effor to cut down national savings by increasing taxes on the largest individual incomes, which account for a large part of the total volume of savings. The undistributed earnings tax was aimed at the same problem.

Now, however, the emphasis is being shifted to the other side of the problem; putting to work as much as possible of the national savings which are steadily accumulating.

To bring that about, many of the New Dealers believe, it will be necessary to have a continuing program of Government investment, financed by borrowing, in tunnels, roads, bridges, rural electrification projects, housing and similar enterprises. But they are eager, too, to give the maximum encouragement to private investment. What they are trying to work out is a comprehensive economic program.

The White Paper On Palestine

FOR A PIECE of disingenuous argument the latest British government paper, detailing plans for the future of Palestine, deserves to rank with the late Runciman report by which the British government presented a lofty argument for whitewashing terror and preparing the way for the ruthless conquest of Czecho-Slovakia.

The administration of Palestine has become a headache, because terrorist Arab gangs, manipulated by unprincipled leaders living off forced subscriptions from poor Arabs and supported by German and Italian agents, have been stirring up risings.

The authority for this statement is not any Jewish committee, but is the British war office, which, in January, 1939, gave out a ten-page press release on the subject for the newspapers.

According to this report the "Arab rebellion" in Palestine is actually limited "to 1,000 to 1,500 men, split up into small bodies . . . and forming the permanent nuclei of rebel gangs. These small parties are reinforced by temporary detachments of armed Fellahin (Arab peasants). . . . In parts of the country . . . definite detachments with leaders and a quota of arms are in existence. Elsewhere villagers are pressed into service by the permanent gangs . . . combining by night for sniping and sabotage—which have become a recognized and remunerative racket. . . . The general policy is more or less directed by the Mufti and the higher Arab committee, but within Palestine the gang leaders are practically independent. . . . The two principal leaders are Abdul Rahim El Haj Mahomed and Aref Abdul Razzik. . . . These two leaders are on such bad terms that on more than one occasion open hostilities have almost broken out between them.

Terror Grips Rules Arab Population

"THE FORMER has endeavored to conduct his campaign on decent lines and dislikes the campaign of assassination and intimidation waged against all moderate Arabs who might oppose the Mufti's policy. . . .

"The second is entirely unprincipled. He consequently enjoys the complete confidence of the rebel leaders outside Palestine and is their principal agent in maintaining the terrorist grip on the Arab population. Incidentally, he pockets a large rake-off from forced subscriptions to rebel funds. . . . The lower class of terrorist 'thugs,' who by assassination, abduction and intimidation of all sorts maintain a grip of terror on the population. . . .

"The power of the rebellion and the safety of its supporters depend on the terrorism imposed on the population by the man with the gun. . . . Even in the large towns there is little sign that the educated classes combine to give support to the gangs. . . . Owing to terrorism, they are supported by the rest of the population, etc., etc."

Now, the British White Paper justifies its Palestine meaures on the ground that it is taking account of the national feelings of the Arab population, although the war office report, which I have just quoted, indicates that the Arab population has nothing to say about anything, but is being systematically terrorized by small groups of political gangsters.

British Succumb To Reign Of Terror

AND THE RESULT of this campaign of terror is that with a lot of weasel words the British government abandons any hope of ever making a real national home for the Jews in Palestine and assures the Arabs that forever they shall have a two-thirds majority of the population.

Why did the British Empire ever set up a homeland for the Jews in Palestine? Out of humanitarian sympathies? Certainly not.

From 1914 to 1918 Great Britain was involved in a war. One of her opponents in that war was Turkey, which ruled Palestine, and which during the war was the base of large Turkish forces which occupied Sinai and made two major attacks on the Suez Canal.

Palestine had already been partially settled by Zionists. Because of its important strategical position, Britain was very anxious to get it, and a few distinguished and able Jews notably assisted England to realize this aim, asking in return that the British give them an opportunity—at long last—to have a home of their own and a chance to demonstrate to the world that the Jews could build up a civilization of their own.

The Jews in Palestine numbered 75,000 in 1919. They now number about 450,000. They have invested in Palestine hundreds of millions of dollars donated by people of their race from all parts of the earth. They have developed beautiful agricultural settlements, built fine cities, constructed roads—and for the sake of building this national home and, Jewish youth, many of whom have academic degrees, have turned themselves into stonebreakers and farmers.

They have demonstrated that Jews are not born to be peddlers or intellectuals or bankers, but can be excellent farmers. They have made a splendid university.

Arabs Were Happy To Sell Their Land

AND THEY HAVE not ousted any Arabs from Palestine. On the contrary, whereas there were 600,000 Arabs in Palestine in 1919, there are now 900,000.

They have not expropriated any Arab land. They have bought it—and their immigration has raised land prices. No Arab has been compelled to sell an inch of land. He has been glad to sell it for more money than he ever dreamed of havmg.

The Jews have paid taxes to the British government; they have developed the mandated territory; their presence there has protected the British oil pipe line from Iraq; and they have believed that Britain would back them up to the point where, eventually, by purchase and development, they would win this tiny spot of the earth for themselves.

There is still more land offered to them, by Arabs, than they have funds to pay for.

One can debate whether the Jews have any right in Palestine, which was unquestionably an Arabian country, but on this subject one certainly can question whether the BRITISH have any right in Palestine—which is certainly not an English country—or whether they have any right in Iraq; or whether they had any right to take, as they did a short time ago, a large chunk of Saudi-Arabia and make it into a protectorate. But there is no suggestion in the White Paper that the British should get out, or in any way limit their activities, or relinquish any of their ownership.

Fascists, Nazis Incited Arabs

THE BRITISH are in Palestine by right of conquest of arms.

The Jews are in Palestine by agreement with the British and by right of colonization and development.

Palestine has become a problem by reason of the incitation of the Arab population by Arabian nationalists, operating with terrorist gangs and assisted by Italian and German propaganda, and Britain has decided that the safest thing for her to do is to come to terms with the Arab leaders.

As a matter of fact, the policy embodied in this White Paper was made, neither in Jerusalem nor in London, but in Cairo, where the Egyptian government, out of distress over Mussolini's activities there, is begging for "peace at any price."

BUT THIS COLUMN gravely fears that the policy now adopted will neither lead to peace nor add anything to the prestige of Great Britain.

the same reasons for my disconnection might remain." His severance was a surprise and a shock to him, he said.

Two Couples Not Questioned

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Billings and Mr. and Mrs. William R. Stewart, who held their jobs while Bibbs lost his, told Senator Ellender they had never made any effort to be kept nor asked "questions about it, one way or another."

Richardson also came to the defense of the Government habit of hiring relatives of present employes, declaring the fact that a person is the relative of an employe known to be good is a recommendation for him.

He said that he had recently given his second cousin, Early T. Bohannon, a job "on the recommendation of department heads," although he knew there would be charges of favoritism.

Willing to Take Rap

"I said then and do now that I'll take the rap for that, for I do not think it is fair his chances should be jeopardized just because he is my relative," he declared. He denied that relatives in the GAO brought pressure to get jobs for their kin, but said they probably often assisted the job seeker by telling him when and where there might be openings.

Mrs. Myrtle Martin charged that she had been passed over in promotions time and again, although "I have worked hard." She was put on work that should pay $2,000 a year, she declared, and kept there for 14 months at her old salary of $1,800.

At the end of the long period, she said, she was "demoted" to her original position. E. W. Bell, chief of the audit division in which Mrs. Martin works, declared she had been kept on the job for 14 months because of the desire to "give her every chance to make good."

Letters in Record

He said he had asked that her apprentice time be extended until there "was no longer any doubt." Bell's testimony was corroborated by various other department heads and numerous letters read into the record.

Richardson said the inaccuracies in Mrs. Martin's auditing sheets on the higher-paying job "would have cost the Government $25,000 a year."

A Significant Defeat

The Senate defeat of the bill authorizing construction of a Florida ship canal is primarily significant as a vote against spending, although the cost of the enterprise is only one of the numerous reasons why this project deserved to be defeated.

Time and again efforts have been made to secure Congressional approval of the plan, despite unfavorable reports of expert engineers, the lack of interest shown by shipping interests, and the objections raised by residents of Florida who fear their underground water supplies will be drained away.

Point by point Senator Vandenberg, leader of the opposition, refuted the arguments advanced by advocates of the canal. He also called attention to the fact that the project was launched without Congressional sanction by using a few million dollars of the WPA lump sum appropriation placed at the disposal of the President. The subsequent attempt of the Chief Executive to put pressure upon Congress to authorize completion of the project was rightly resented as an attempt to usurp Congressional prerogatives by indirect means. Even if there were no other compelling reasons for turning down the canal plan Congress might well hesitate to approve a project it has repeatedly declined to consider.

However, it is not necessary to recall old grievances or even to prove that the canal is economically unjustified in order to explain the adverse vote of the Senate. Senator Vandenberg really summed up the situation when he said: "I assert that no Senator who votes two or three hundred million dollars to any project which is not pressingly needed can ever again lay the slightest claim to interest in either economy or conservation; and when the project is not only not needed, but is not even wanted by most of those presumed to be served by it, the sheer waste of two or three hundred million dollars becomes an insufferable affront to the public welfare."

That is indeed the basic issue, as Senator Vandenberg asserted, and it is probable that most of the large group of Democrats who joined the Republicans to defeat the bill share his views.

The Immortal Ritz

The poets by and large have taken immortality for granted. "I shall never utterly die," said Horace complacently. What he meant, of course, was that his poetry, and hence his memory, was imperishable. In words that are almost a paraphrase of Horace's, Shakespeare wrote that thereby indicating that he was bestowing some of his own guaranteed immortality on the subject of the sonnet, whose identity, by the way, is still a matter of great controversy among the critics.

Evidently there is a certain truth in what the poets say. Still, the kind of immortality they have earned for themselves seems rather limited compared with the kind of immortality bestowed by the caprice of language. When the 2,000th birthday anniversary of old H. Q. Flaccus occurred about 4 years ago only a handful of Latinists bothered to notice it. And certainly the name of Shakespeare cannot stir up half or a tenth of the emotions aroused by the name of the obscure geographer for whom this continent was absent-mindedly named. The question of whether Shakespeare was Shakespeare or another fellow is nothing compared to the question of what is American and what un-American.

The late Cesar Ritz, whose widow is now visiting Washington, is a recent instance of this neologistic immortality. The descriptive epithet "ritzy" now seems as firmly embedded in the language as "bowdlerized," "machiavellian," "chauvinistic," "lynch" or "boycott." And it is a far pleasanter word than any of them.

It is possible, even probable, that the word "ritzy" will remain long after the Ritz Hotels, wonderful as they are, are no more remembered than the courts of Jamshyd. Who now can tell the original significance of "the real Mullarkey" or "the genuine McCoy?" Who could undertake to write the biography of Hebe Jebes?

The immortality of the poets is personal. The other is a kind of nirvana.

The White Paper

The latest British White Paper marks the penultimate stage in the liquidation by the British government of those obligations which it assumed when it issued the Balfour Declaration in 1917 and which it renewed, two and a half years later, when it accepted the mandate for Palestine.

The Balfour Declaration declared that the British government viewed "with favor the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

Later it was argued that this pledge conflicted with that said to have been given the Arabs by the British High Commissioner to Egypt, Sir Henry MacMahon, and by other British agents. This MacMahon has denied and his published correspondence with the Sherif of Mecca, according to the White Paper, is hostile to any such theory. At any rate, it cannot be denied that by far the largest part of the Arabian peninsula has been turned over to the Arabs and is today governed by them.

Furthermore, many Englishmen who played a highly responsible role in British affairs at the time the Balfour Declaration was issued, actually saw the National Home pledge as leading, sooner or later, to the establishment of a Jewish state and gave that idea their warm indorsement. "Our wish," said Lord Robert (now Viscount) Cecil, "is that Arabian countries shall be for Arabs, Armenia for the Armenians and Judea for the Jews."

Almost from the beginning, however, the actual and implied obligations of the Balfour Declaration began to be whittled away. The Zionist experiment so hopefully launched and so universally approved, not only in Great Britain but in many other parts of the world as well, was from the outset surrounded by difficulties.

They increased as Arab nationalistic sentiment developed, as the Near East and the Mohammedan world became an increasingly important factor in British calculations and as outside forces found it useful and convenient to roil the already troubled waters of Holy Land antagonisms.

Despite these difficulties, however, the Zionist experiment went forward. Palestine, which had been wasted and denuded in the course of the centuries, began to blossom like a rose as a result of the tremendous efforts to create the Jewish National Home. And these efforts, far from hurting the Palestinian Arabs, enormously benefited them. Yet in making Palestine a rich prize the Zionists also increased the difficulties which stand in the way of the fulfillment of their dreams.

From time to time since the end of the World War, serious Arab outbreaks have occurred. Toward them the British government has shown a strange indifference. It was well over a year after the outbreak of the 1936 riots, for instance, that sufficient additional troops were sent to Palestine to cope with the situation. Even then some of the ringleaders, notably the Grand Mufti, one of the most extreme of Arab Nationalist leaders, were so poorly guarded after their apprehension that they easily managed to make their escape to carry on their incitements and intrigues from outside the Holy Land.

In desperation, a Royal Commission recommended and the British government approved a plan to partition Palestine into a tiny Jewish and a larger Arab state, with Great Britain continuing to hold a mandate for the holy cities and a corridor to the sea. That plan met with little approval. It was bitterly opposed by Arabs and by a considerable element among the Jews. It met with a very lukewarm reception in the British Parliament and was critically viewed by the League Mandates Commission. This idea has now been dropped.

Instead, the British government now proposes the independence of Palestine in ten years, with Jewish immigration to be permitted only during the next five. In that time only 75,000 Jews are to be admitted, a paltry number in comparison with Palestine's demonstrated absorptive capacity and completely out of line with the desperate needs of the Jews of Central and Eastern Europe. To them Palestine is today, one of the few places of refuge that remain.

The British White Paper rejects the Arab demand that Palestine be transformed into an Arab state, like Transjordan or Irak or Saudi Arabia. The new state, according to the terms of the White Paper, will be neither Arab nor Jewish but with full equality vouchsafed all inhabitants alike. Yet with the Jewish total limited to 30 per cent the British hope that independence will mean peace and Arab-Jewish co-operation may prove only wishful thinking.

At any other time the repudiation of solemn obligations undertaken in the past would have been tragic. It is particularly so now. The mistakes of 22 years cannot be rectified by renunciation of responsibility. In seeking to cut the Gordian knot of Palestine, Great Britain may only make it tighter, and in the process strangle one of the most idealistic experiments of our times.

Case Histories

The case method was effectively applied to the study of tax problems by Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., when he testified before the Temporary National Economic Committee on Wednesday.

Mr. Young pointed out that $192,000,000 of the $322,000,000 of capital investment of the company has been provided out of earnings, while $92,000,000 has been obtained through cash investments either in the form of stock subscriptions or purchases of bonds later converted into stock. He naturally drew attention to the evils of undistributed profits taxation which interferes with the reinvestment of earnings and thus retards the development and expansion of new industries.

The history of the General Electric also provided Mr. Young with some excellent arguments against the capital gains tax. Had this kind of taxation been in operation in the nineties, it is doubtful whether the company could have survived the panic of 1893. Moreover, Mr. Young thinks it "probably could not have obtained such large subscriptions to its capital stock after the turn of the century."

In thus applying generalized criticisms to the company with which his name has been so long associated, Mr. Young has struck a particularly telling blow on behalf of needed tax reforms. He speaks the more forcefully because he cannot be convicted of harboring selfish designs. The General Electric is no longer in the developmental stage at which it needs to attract outside capital, or to retain earnings for expansion. It has ample liquid capital at its disposal, no capital debts; and no reason to withhold earnings from its stockholders. In short, here is another case to show that repressive business taxes injure the smaller, struggling companies, not the well-established enterprises.

In substantial accord with the views expressed by Mr. Young, Alfred P. Sloan, who was on the witness stand yesterday, also emphasized the importance of reinvesting earnings in growing industries. During an 18-year period, he stated, the General Motors Corporation has retained $490,000,000 of profit and has accumulated about $520,000,000 to cover depreciation charges. That huge sum has been plowed back into the company, and used to expand plant and equipment, to provide special tools and for other operations.

No doubt the same story could be told, with variations, by innumerable businessmen who have knowledge of the way in which American industry has been built up from within, through energy, confidence and self-denial. Success stories of this kind will, however, cease to be commonplace recitals if the inducements to take risks, and the opportunities to accumulate savings for risk-taking, are destroyed by repressive forms of taxation.

One Gland Sweet Song

In this wide-eyed world one expects a new scientific wonder to arrive daily, with the milk and the morning paper. So it may be somewhat temerarious to suggest that Dr. Serge Voronoff, experimenter in rejuvenation, is a shade too sanguine in predicting that the average span of human life will be extended to 150 years by the grafting of monkey glands. Still one cannot help, on occasion, being somewhat temerarious, can one?

Dr. Voronoff offers as evidence the fact that several notable European statesmen have taken the treatment with success. But, lacking identification, one is left in doubt. The fact may have absolutely nothing to do with the monkey tricks played on the European stage.

Assuming that the theory is correct and that the practice of grafting will become general, monkeys will have to be bred in large numbers. Then a visit to the monkey house in the zoo will cease to have its thrills. It will become the rendezvous of nonogenarians who will nudge each other and say, "There's the lad who is saving up a few extra years for me."

And the social effect of it all will be revolutionary. We shall become a nation of old folk. Already the trend is in that direction. People are living longer and the birth rate is decreasing, even without glands. Soon life as it is habitually lived will be long enough for most people. So why monkey with it?

Fathers Versus Sons

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

It is rather rare in sports for sons to follow in their fathers' footsteps. It is not only a question of inclination but of physique and aptitude as well. Uncounted are the heartaches of one-time gridiron heroes who have seen their sons grow up spindle-legged and indifferent to the possibilities of the single-wing-back formation; of tennis stars whose kids are allergic to catgut; of pole-vaulters whose offspring can't spring off a stone wall without cracking a rib.

But baseball fathers are favored; possibly because nearly every boy in America plays baseball at one time or another. Walter Peckinpaugh, son of Roger, revered by every Yankee fan of 15 years' standing, is actually considering a barnstorming tour by sons of the diamond great.

Dig Deeper

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago we heard over the radio a story which, if we should choose to interpret it spiritually, becomes arresting. Of course, thousands of people have visions and dreams—in fact, we all share in this experience—but how few, perhaps, see in them guidance or lessons to be learned.

An editor, broadcasting "news items," told the story about a woman who had a vision regarding a treasure supposed to be buried in her back yard. After digging for it for some time she uncovered—not a thing! Later on she had another vision showing her that she should dig deeper. And while she was digging this second time she found anything but a treasure, for her labors yielded broken bottles and tin cans.

Now, from the human and intellectual viewpoint, some visions seem to be ridiculous, but spiritually or, rather, mystically, there are many true visions that have a definite meaning. The ancient prophets and patriarchs knew how to search for the hidden meaning concealed in visions. They knew that a true vision does not have an outer meaning, but a deep inner significance. They would never be inclined to search in back yards, but would thoroughly enjoy searching within the depth of the human soul. It is quite in keeping with the materialistic age in which we live for people to seek material treasures only, unaware of the gems they might unearth which are latent within the human spirit. Idle Capital

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I understand that a certain party here in Washington, who is closely connected with the Government and who has had a considerable part in the determining of governmental policies in this country during the past few years, wants to know why there is so much idle capital about the country and why this capital does not go to work.

Well, if he really wants to know, why not ask the investors, the people who own this idle capital which is available for investments? Would not that be the logical thing to do? And it seems to me that it also would be a very simple thing to do—if he really wants to know.

Resistance

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have merely to think about the far-from-simple problem of nonresistance in order to realize that for this Nation of many minds to practice it with anything like the degree of unanimity necessary to make it a telling thing belongs to some distant day. We know that at some point along the increasingly intolerable course of aggression, we shall willy-nilly find ourselves fighting. This is the most elementary realism.

Admittedly, nonresistance is a priceless thing, and a thing capable, with cultivation, of endless growth, endless possibilities. But let us also realize that just as our faith as a Nation is not yet sufficient to enable us to get along without food and drink or, at least, without doctors and hospitals, policemen and jails, even so our brotherly love is not yet grown so divine that we can hope to dispense with soldiers and munitions works. Show me a nation that is successfully practicing nonresistance against crime, and I will show you a nation that might consider the logical next step, which is nonresistance against the international crime of aggression!

Different Welcome

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was interested in Mr. Folliard's article in The Post of May 7, dealing with the official greeting given President Somoza of Nicaragua.

I heartily approve of having a short parade, but I believe that a different type of welcome would not only be of greater interest to the heads of most foreign states but would have the added advantage of attracting more of the "blase" Washington populace. Could not an official greeting be planned that would help foreigners to understand and appreciate what is unique about our country, and in which as varied groups as possible would be represented, rather than just the military?

Two excellent Government projects might be used. The chorus organized by the National Capital Parks to greet the notables at the Union Station with the singing of their national anthem. Then a procession of marchers, floats, etc., would constitute the parade, illustrating the "Typical Contributions to American Industry and Culture" as depicted in "Americans All, Immigrants All" recently published by the Office of Education of the Interior Department.

The amazing variety of background from which Americans have sprung would be illustrated by showing different racial groups at work in the industries to which they have particularly contributed, as for example, the Scandinavian dairymen of Minnesota, the Chinese laborers in the gold mines of California, the Portuguese fishermen in New England. The recent Folk Festival suggests how the cultural contributions of different groups could be included to make this parade one of unusual variety, color and interest. With the help of the Government bureaus and State societies, would not such a parade be feasible and worth a trial?

"Treacherous Minority"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Pegler's column on the "Treacherous Minority" in The Post of May 12 certainly belies the title of his column, "Fair Enough." May I suggest that he omit the "Fair" and warn prospective readers by the single word, "Enough."

Pegler may be privileged to disapprove of any political creed that he may desire, but when he repudiates all sympathy toward the Communists he goes too far because in so doing he closes the door to the acceptance of many projects that Americans should inaugurate by the token of possessing a government by and for all people.

American democracy can well afford to regard those countries where there are factors of social development in common with our own, and Pegler cannot deny that Russia deserves more sympathy than does Nazi Germany. I cite only one example that was recently called to my attention by an eminent Chilean.

He discussed the lead that his country and Soviet Russia have taken in the field of public health, and the conclusion to be drawn from what he said was that any administration in this country should be tolerant of such progressive ideas and the country from which they come.

For Moderation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Washington the Beautiful" is, I know, famous as the "depression boom" town. Erudite bums who get around will tell you there's no depression here.

But I wonder if intelligent members of carpenters' locals don't feel a bit guilty asking $13 for a seven-hour day. And they're going to strike if they don't get it!

Perhaps this is just some of the superadvancement advocated by the New Deal, which, as we all know, despises the labor vote. Maybe, too, it is just a start. The real Utopia will come a few years from now with $15 demanded for a six-hour day!

Contrast living expenses today with the '20's: butter, 25 cents, against 50 cents; sliced bacon, 25 cents, versus 60 cents; steak and beef twice the present cost; rents lower, due to losses taken by capital putters-up, not to the inordinately low wages of the '20's. Clothes are now 50 per cent cheaper.

And in those decadent '20's your present servant drew down wages of $8.40 to $10—my sense of reasonableness rebelled at any scale over that, and still does—and saved $6,000 in five years, without half trying.

Who is going to buy the houses put up under the proposed fancy wages? Millions of depression-made millionaires we all hear about or the middle third seldom spoken of by Roosevelt and fellow miraclemen, from whom taxes are wrenched?

These demands will further reduce the amount of carpenter work on each unit. The bunk about excessive wages to a favored few ushering in general prosperity is one of the angles of political bunk exploded during the last painful years. Why this mutton-headed failure to recognize existence of 20,000,000 of unemployed in this country? This is a plea for moderation. If not forthcoming, it's the demanders who'll find themselves the losers.

"Moral Rearmament"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would be remiss indeed if I did not send you a note of thanks and appreciation for the unusual and timely editorial, "Moral Rearmament," which appeared in The Post on May 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Moral Rearmament," in The Post of May 16 is worthy of high commendation. It has been read with gratification by some of my co-workers in the Treasury Department, who, upon hearing of the program of moral rearmament for the first time recently, ejaculated, "Why hasn't this been given more publicity? Certainly it is the only answer."

All of us look forward to finding such news given increasingly more prominence in The Post.

Third Term

The Post Impressionist

Who Said Semantics?

I AM a fugitive from co-ordination.

Or, rather, I wish I could be. My flight is doomed to failure, however, because, as a reporter, I cover meetings where co-ordination is the sole topic of discussion.

Early in every reporter's novitiate comes the realization that at any given meeting where the word "co-ordination" has been mentioned three times he may rise, leave the room and phone his city editor that he will cover the event in two paragraphs—two more than it deserves as a news item.

Delvers into the folklore of American administration have come to the correct conclusion that "co-ordination" is a fundamentally meaningless word, accompanied, however, by a series of connotations which make it a delight to use by anyone with nothing else to say.

Pompous, jaw-filling, undefinable, it is used to describe an as yet unformulated program or a nonexisting, nebulous objective.

For example:

The Carnarsie Burrow, No. 14, Amalgamated Hibernators of America, hears a report from its child-guidance committee. The committee, hastily routed out by the chairman the night before, after six months' inactivity, has no idea of what it is supposed to be doing, has not done it, and has no intention of ever doing it. Its chairman, therefore, reports the following night that the child-guidance committee "has taken significant steps to co-ordinate its program with the broad, fundamental policies of the parent organization and looks forward to a marked advancement of the program decided upon at the last meeting."

Significantly, the word is never used in the past tense. No one ever reports that anything has been co-ordinated. It is always that "the next move is to co-ordinate the activities" or "we must strive for co-ordination of past developments into an integrated whole."

"Integration," of course, is a word in the same class with "co-ordination" and means the same thing, if any. Full of sound and fury, the two are indispensable to persons and organizations which signify nothing.

To prove the point, one needs only mention a former prominent Government official's supremely sterile press conferences. For six long and unavailing years, when the most diligent research could discover not the slightest vestige of activity by his agency, he dropped the words "co-ordination" and "integration" as often as a debutante says "but definitely." Asked how he was going to contribute to recovery, the official would reply, "By co-ordinating the program of the organization with the national economy's basic needs."

Asked what progress he could report from some new and highly publicized venture, he would note "the integration of the study's aims into a well-ballasted policy co-ordinated with the national objectives."

A "well-ballasted" program or policy was one of the official's favorite terms. Another, of wider currency, was "implemented." Both deserve permanent niches in the American temple of deceptive euphemism.

To "implement," in that sense, is apparently nothing more than a precious synonym for "equip." When someone reports a tangible achievement in public, however, and says that his program has been "equipped" with the necessary powers or tools to make it workable, he will proceed to specify, in detail, just what those tools or powers are. If, on the other hand, he reports that his program has been or will be "implemented," the matter ends there. He has actually said that he is up a stump, either through laziness or ignorance, and that he intends to do nothing more about it save keep up appearances—mainly with the use of more empty verbosity.

Another favorite among New Dealers, social workers and luncheon clubs is "follow through," which, if it has any meaning at all, signifies "continue." If a speaker says he will continue to work on his given activity, there is some small chance he may actually do so. If he promises, however, to "follow through," the listener may securely translate "forget about it."

Surely no other language can boast such satisfying words. To co-ordinate, implement, integrate, ballast, follow through—fine words, fine ideas, connoting big-time stuff, heavy thinking, lofty aims, well thought out plans of action. They indicate that the speaker is making a strong stand but they avoid the embarrassment of saying where, or how, or when, or why, or who, or what. They commit the utterer to nothing; they leave the listener satisfied. They have no kick-back.

Their triumph is to camouflage the nonexistent.

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

Scrap Iron

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of April 29 you print a letter from Henry D. Baker, of Durham, N. C., in which he reiterates the misconception that American scrap iron is used for making explosive or shrapnel shells by the Japanese for use in China.

It is true that small pieces of steel are used in some shells, but these pieces are not scrap. To use irregular bits of scrap would so unbalance a shell that it could not be fired.

Scrap is used to make steel, and in the process it completely loses its identity. The dealer in scrap can no more predestinate its use than the farmer in North Dakota can specify that his wheat shall be used to feed American children rather than foreign soldiers.

Fair Enough

Press And Royalty

IT WILL BE worth remembering when the British King and Queen come to this country that they are not coming to visit the American newspapers or the reporters or trained seals assigned to the story and that the press has no social rights or prerogatives in the matter.

It is the job of the press to cover the story just as it is the job of the railroadmen to run the train on which those tourists ride, and there is no obligation on the King or Queen to take any journalists on their laps or invite them to pull up chairs and shoot olive pits with them. They don't owe any consideration to the social ambitions or pretensions of any publishers or any wives thereof or of any staff or syndicate journalist. However sensitive or self-important, therefore, any reprisal on them in the form of a "bad press" for failure to propitiate the press will smack of blackmail and hurt the papers more than them.

No Need to Fawn On Working Press

IT SHOULDN'T be necessary for anyone to fawn on the press or its individual representatives in order to escape deliberately nasty publicity, and the fact that such is notoriously the case in the journalism of Hollywood and the so-called Broadway sector, is a reproach which ought to be localized or abolished and certainly not extended. Insidiously, though not quietly, there has developed a small group of personally vain and hypersensitive poseurs and poseuses in the newspaper business who regard themselves as persons of great celebrity and, in arrogant ignorance of the first principles of journalism, require flattering attention as the price of praise or forbearance and avenge with scurrilous innuendoes any manifestation of the contempt which they deserve.

The journalistic orgies of the Hauptmann trial were a revolting demonstration of this new method of personal exploitation at the expense of the story and of justice itself, and the same bug has infected—although much less flagrantly—the fourth estate of Washington under the New Deal.

Newspaper People Should Keep Distance

NEWSPAPER PEOPLE ought to keep their distance socially from the objects of their professional coverage and neither seek nor permit themselves to be drawn into a zone of intimacy in which impartial reporting could be construed as retaliation for personal slight or payment for social favor. Mrs. Roosevelt's neighborly warmth was a sharp relief from the bleak austerity of her immediate predecessor in that which she appears to regard as a public office, but, as a result, in some cases individuals have been made to seem rude if not hostile to the Administration who only insisted on keeping their distance and their perspective and choosing their own society.

Nobody knows beyond a guess why the King and Queen are coming here at this time, he with much work undone at the office, and she with a sinkful of dishes, so to speak, but outwardly, least, their visit is purely social. Thus the British Embassy's failure to invite the whole Washington corps of journalists to the garden party for their nibs is no calamity to the press and shouldn't be one to them.

Party In Garden Will Not Be News

REPORTERS, thank God, are not society, and those who think they are are neither reporters nor society, but inept amateurs who don't speak the language, on the professional side, and climbers, lobbyists or broken-down aristocrats, on the social side.

And the party in the garden will not be news unless some appointee's wife tries to pick a brawl with the Queen over the debt or Bunker Hill or some buck New Dealer with a snootful of the embassy's best thinks the occasion appropriate to sing the one beginning "The Minstrels Sing of a Jovial King; a Wonderful King Was He." Either one would be a faux pas, causing consternation, but no reporter invited as a guest under the social obligations binding on a guest could write the piece without sacrifice of personal honor, so it were best for the press to scout around outside and obtain the news from some invitee when the butlers begin to heave them over the garden wall.

This exclusion is to the advantage of the press in another way, too, for this will be one time when no man can say he was a reporter—what else did you expect?—who staggered out with a quart in each pocket or pushed Lady Agatha into the fountain.

Members of the District of Columbia Optometry Board and representatives of stores engaged in the "corporate practice" of optometry will continue their testimony today before a House sub-committee

Harry Cohn, representing the American Optometrical Association, will be among the witnesses who will appear to oppose "the practice of optometry" in department and jewelry stores. He declared yesterday that the quarrel between the "store and professional" optometrists is not localized in Washington but is Nation-wide.

Argument before the committee yesterday did not touch on merits of the two opposing bills before the committee but was between the opposing groups on their rights to raise money and employ counsel to push their respective claims.

New Term For Quezon

By Vicente Albano Pacis

The Philippine Re-election Problem

Manila.

IT SEEMS that after several years of quiet agitation for the re-election of President Manuel L. Quezon, of the Philippine Commonwealth, in spite of the categorical prohibition of the Philippine constitution, Philippine public opinion has been so crystallized that the matter is ready for presentation to Washington, where refusal to have the constitution amended will readily appear as an unmitigated act of thumbing down the Filipino people.

The boom for Mr. Quezon's re-election started soon after the inauguration of the Commonwealth, but Quezon himself threw cold water on it when he announced that he was not a candidate to succeed himself. It was almost definitely squelched when reports, never authoritatively denied, reached Manila to the effect that the Washington authorities frowned upon the idea of amending the Philippine constitution so soon and especially for the benefit, at least apparently, of a single individual. When the reports became current in Manila, President Quezon even more categorically declared that he was not the least bit interested in another term.

AT ABOUT this juncture a long-range program of expanding the Malacanan estate, the residence of the President was started. It included the renovation and expansion of the palace, the conversion of a large area across the Pasig River into a park as part of the Presidential estate, and the construction of various outhouses, including the guest houses, playgrounds and a massive garage, which at this writing is about to be completed. One day one of the political leaders with Presidential aspirations was a Malacanan luncheon guest and, being more or less in intimate relations with the President, ventured to fish.

"Judging from the permanent improvements you are carrying out here," he remarked with a twinkle in his eyes, "it looks as if you intend to stay here very long!"

The President, who holds the championship record in the islands for ability to get out of tight spots, simply replied, "I am preparing all this for you fellows who will come after me."

The Philippine constitution expressly prohibits the re-election of the President but gives him a term of six years. This feature was pointed to at the time of the drafting of the constitution as an improvement over the American Constitution. It was explained that a chief executive invariably looks forward to a second term and, in doing so, utilizes the latter half of his first term for mending his political fences. The Philippine provision, it was claimed, completely dissociates the Philippine President from politics.

FOLLOWING the spirit of this prohibition, President Quezon soon after his inauguration announced his retirement from politics. He placed himself outside of his party and refused to meddle in the election held two years after his inauguration for provincial and municipal officials. When, late last year, the election for members of the Assembly was held, however, he openly participated in the campaign on the excuse that he was interested in getting a legislative body that would co-operate with the executive. In effect, a 100 per cent Quezon Assembly was elected.

Since the Assembly has always been called a Quezon Assembly, its leaders, Speaker Yulo and Floor Leader Paredes, have announced that it will not take the complete initiative to amend the constitution. The constitution provides that it may be amended by the Assembly or by a constituent convention called by the Assembly for the purpose, the proposed amendment in either case to be approved or disapproved at a referendum to take place during a regular election. The only general election to take place before the Presidential term expires is that for provincial and municipal officials in 1940. Before then, the convention must be called and the amendment proposed. It is predicted that the proposed amendments will eventually multiply to include the establishment of a Senate, thus also discarding the unicameralism which, at the time the President of the United States was to act on the constitution, was also pointed out as one more improvement over other constitutions.

ARGUMENTS for President Quezon's re-election are that the people demand it generally; that the years 1942-1948 will be the most critical period of the Commonwealth, since the American export taxes will be applied on Philippine products; that the constitutional prohibition is a sort of "squinting" provision, meant more for the period of the republic, since it provides for six-year terms, whereas the remaining Commonwealth term is only for four years; that Quezon is admittedly the best Filipino leader and must, therefore, be mustered in when the country cannot afford to take chances. The open and systematic campaign for Quezon's re-election was started by Messrs. Yule and Parades and the DMHM newspapers, a syndicate friendly to Quezon.

Arguments advanced against Quezon's re-election are that to do so would be to admit that the Filipinos lack tried and experienced leaders; that to amend the constitution for Quezon would be to predicate such a fundamental popular act on a single person; that to do so would be to interrupt the development of Philippine constitutionalism; that it will constitute a bad and dangerous precedent, giving a President a means to perpetuate himself in power.

THERE IS NO doubt, however, unless President Quezon himself stops the Assembly from taking the initiative, that the amendment or amendments will be proposed, either by the Assembly or a special convention and approved by the people overwhelmingly.

U. S. to Attack Price Checks On Building

Murphy Announces Drive to Break Up Materials Trusts

Attorney General Murphy yesterday announced that the Justice Department proposes to "attack" unlawful "price raising restraints of trade" in the building industry which are "an unsupportable burden on the public and act as a brake on the general recovery of business."

The attroney general asserted at his press conference that the Justice Department has been investigating practices affecting home building.

Some situations related to home building supplies are "quite scandalous," he said. He added that the department's survey would concentrate upon areas "where the most good can be achieved." He mentioned New York, Chicago, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Detroit, St. Louis and Cleveland.

Statement of Policy

The announcement of the proposed "attack" was contained in a statement by the Department of Justice on anti-trust policy. It said, "the purpose of this statement is not to announce a new policy, but, if possible, to make the position of the Government in respect to the anti-trust laws better understood.

"While it is the aim of the department, so far as its facilities permit, to prosecute every substantial violation of the law that is brought to its attention, it will not be content with sporadic prosecution of individual or isolated cases.

"Where it finds, for example, that the production or distribution of a particular commodity, like milk or housing materials, is being adversely affected by practices which it deems contrary to the anti-trust laws, it will be the policy of the department to include in a single proceeding all the groups and individuals whose illegal activities affect or contribute to the situation that needs to be remedied."

By the Associated Press.

James A. Moffett, oil executive and former Federal Housing administrator, said after a White House conference yesterday he was prepared to organize a private national mortgage association to supply $200,000,000 or more of mortgage money for home and factory construction.

New Program In Making

By Ernest K. Lindley

Utilizing Vast Savings

STORIES about a new Government spending and investment program have begun to appear on the front pages of the newspapers. No such program bears the imprimatur of the White House—as yet, at least.

A few New Dealers have begun to talk to newspapermen about plans they have been discussing for months, even years. This talk is not primarily connected with the failure of the generally anticipated spring business recovery to materialize. It is preparation for 1940 and later.

The economic disappointments of the spring are blamed on the European crisis by most New Deal economists—and in that judgment they, for once, seem to be in agreement with an impressive number of their colleagues in Wall Street. Economists in the Administration are, on the whole, moderately optimistic about the business outlook for the rest of this year and for next spring. They are thinking chiefly about what will be needed after next spring: not only during the politically important summer and fall of 1940, but during the ensuing years.

Aim At Moment Is Chiefly Educational

WHAT THEY are trying to work toward is a consistent economic program for the United States during the fifth decade of the twentieth century. Their aim at the moment is primarily educational.

Their most ambitious educational effort is the study of savings and investment on which the Temporary National Economic Committee—the "monopoly" investigation—is now holding hearings. This is intended partly for the general public, but also for Congress and for some of the top people in the Administration, including the Secretary of the Treasury—and the President himself.

It has always been difficult to get the President to think in economic terms. He thinks primarily in political and moral terms. Concerning economic recovery in this country he has been almost consistently overoptimistic.

The economic views of Henry Morgenthau, jr., have been thoroughly orthodox except for the faith in monetary manipulation which he imbibed from the now almost-forgotten Prof. Warren. An excellent administrator and a man of high principles and fine sympathies, the Secretary of the Treasury has done next to nothing to develop and educate the public to the kind of financial program which most of the New Dealers have come to regard as necessary. In the last several months he has listened attentively at a few private educational sessions. Some of the New Dealers think he is beginning to catch on to their ideas.

Two Reasons Hinted For Stagnant Capital

THE NEW DEALERS have made some progress at the White House, also. It was reflected in the President's message of Tuesday, focusing attention on the TNEC hearings. As he said, the major problem of the TNEC is to ascertain "why a large part of our vast reservoir of money and savings have remained idle in stagnant pools."

The President did not anticipate the answer. But he suggested that there were two principal reasons. One is that we have left the era of rapid expansion in private enterprise and entered upon an era of more gradual growth in which private industry will need less new capital than it has needed in earlier decades. The other is that there are leaks and frictions in the operation of the investment market.

The prevailing New Deal thought is that the difficulty lies only partly with the machinery of the investment market. But where it differs from orthodox economic thought is in the belief that the more important and more enduring difficulty is the fact that the national savings—the combined savings of individuals and corporations—exceed by far the need of private industry for new capital. Believing that, they argue that either the total volume of national savings must be cut down or else the savings which are left unused by private industry must be used by the Government for investments of the type which private enterprise cannot or will not undertake.

Half-Hearted Effort To Solve Problem

THE ROOSEVELT Administration has made a half-hearted effor to cut down national savings by increasing taxes on the largest individual incomes, which account for a large part of the total volume of savings. The undistributed earnings tax was aimed at the same problem.

Now, however, the emphasis is being shifted to the other side of the problem; putting to work as much as possible of the national savings which are steadily accumulating.

To bring that about, many of the New Dealers believe, it will be necessary to have a continuing program of Government investment, financed by borrowing, in tunnels, roads, bridges, rural electrification projects, housing and similar enterprises. But they are eager, too, to give the maximum encouragement to private investment. What they are trying to work out is a comprehensive economic program.

The White Paper On Palestine

FOR A PIECE of disingenuous argument the latest British government paper, detailing plans for the future of Palestine, deserves to rank with the late Runciman report by which the British government presented a lofty argument for whitewashing terror and preparing the way for the ruthless conquest of Czecho-Slovakia.

The administration of Palestine has become a headache, because terrorist Arab gangs, manipulated by unprincipled leaders living off forced subscriptions from poor Arabs and supported by German and Italian agents, have been stirring up risings.

The authority for this statement is not any Jewish committee, but is the British war office, which, in January, 1939, gave out a ten-page press release on the subject for the newspapers.

According to this report the "Arab rebellion" in Palestine is actually limited "to 1,000 to 1,500 men, split up into small bodies . . . and forming the permanent nuclei of rebel gangs. These small parties are reinforced by temporary detachments of armed Fellahin (Arab peasants). . . . In parts of the country . . . definite detachments with leaders and a quota of arms are in existence. Elsewhere villagers are pressed into service by the permanent gangs . . . combining by night for sniping and sabotage—which have become a recognized and remunerative racket. . . . The general policy is more or less directed by the Mufti and the higher Arab committee, but within Palestine the gang leaders are practically independent. . . . The two principal leaders are Abdul Rahim El Haj Mahomed and Aref Abdul Razzik. . . . These two leaders are on such bad terms that on more than one occasion open hostilities have almost broken out between them.

Terror Grips Rules Arab Population

"THE FORMER has endeavored to conduct his campaign on decent lines and dislikes the campaign of assassination and intimidation waged against all moderate Arabs who might oppose the Mufti's policy. . . .

"The second is entirely unprincipled. He consequently enjoys the complete confidence of the rebel leaders outside Palestine and is their principal agent in maintaining the terrorist grip on the Arab population. Incidentally, he pockets a large rake-off from forced subscriptions to rebel funds. . . . The lower class of terrorist 'thugs,' who by assassination, abduction and intimidation of all sorts maintain a grip of terror on the population. . . .

"The power of the rebellion and the safety of its supporters depend on the terrorism imposed on the population by the man with the gun. . . . Even in the large towns there is little sign that the educated classes combine to give support to the gangs. . . . Owing to terrorism, they are supported by the rest of the population, etc., etc."

Now, the British White Paper justifies its Palestine meaures on the ground that it is taking account of the national feelings of the Arab population, although the war office report, which I have just quoted, indicates that the Arab population has nothing to say about anything, but is being systematically terrorized by small groups of political gangsters.

British Succumb To Reign Of Terror

AND THE RESULT of this campaign of terror is that with a lot of weasel words the British government abandons any hope of ever making a real national home for the Jews in Palestine and assures the Arabs that forever they shall have a two-thirds majority of the population.

Why did the British Empire ever set up a homeland for the Jews in Palestine? Out of humanitarian sympathies? Certainly not.

From 1914 to 1918 Great Britain was involved in a war. One of her opponents in that war was Turkey, which ruled Palestine, and which during the war was the base of large Turkish forces which occupied Sinai and made two major attacks on the Suez Canal.

Palestine had already been partially settled by Zionists. Because of its important strategical position, Britain was very anxious to get it, and a few distinguished and able Jews notably assisted England to realize this aim, asking in return that the British give them an opportunity—at long last—to have a home of their own and a chance to demonstrate to the world that the Jews could build up a civilization of their own.

The Jews in Palestine numbered 75,000 in 1919. They now number about 450,000. They have invested in Palestine hundreds of millions of dollars donated by people of their race from all parts of the earth. They have developed beautiful agricultural settlements, built fine cities, constructed roads—and for the sake of building this national home and, Jewish youth, many of whom have academic degrees, have turned themselves into stonebreakers and farmers.

They have demonstrated that Jews are not born to be peddlers or intellectuals or bankers, but can be excellent farmers. They have made a splendid university.

Arabs Were Happy To Sell Their Land

AND THEY HAVE not ousted any Arabs from Palestine. On the contrary, whereas there were 600,000 Arabs in Palestine in 1919, there are now 900,000.

They have not expropriated any Arab land. They have bought it—and their immigration has raised land prices. No Arab has been compelled to sell an inch of land. He has been glad to sell it for more money than he ever dreamed of having.

The Jews have paid taxes to the British government; they have developed the mandated territory; their presence there has protected the British oil pipe line from Iraq; and they have believed that Britain would back them up to the point where, eventually, by purchase and development, they would win this tiny spot of the earth for themselves.

There is still more land offered to them, by Arabs, than they have funds to pay for.

One can debate whether the Jews have any right in Palestine, which was unquestionably an Arabian country, but on this subject one certainly can question whether the BRITISH have any right in Palestine—which is certainly not an English country—or whether they have any right in Iraq; or whether they had any right to take, as they did a short time ago, a large chunk of Saudi-Arabia and make it into a protectorate. But there is no suggestion in the White Paper that the British should get out, or in any way limit their activities, or relinquish any of their ownership.

Fascists, Nazis Incited Arabs

THE BRITISH are in Palestine by right of conquest of arms.

The Jews are in Palestine by agreement with the British and by right of colonization and development.

Palestine has become a problem by reason of the incitation of the Arab population by Arabian nationalists, operating with terrorist gangs and assisted by Italian and German propaganda, and Britain has decided that the safest thing for her to do is to come to terms with the Arab leaders.

As a matter of fact, the policy embodied in this White Paper was made, neither in Jerusalem nor in London, but in Cairo, where the Egyptian government, out of distress over Mussolini's activities there, is begging for "peace at any price."

BUT THIS COLUMN gravely fears that the policy now adopted will neither lead to peace nor add anything to the prestige of Great Britain.

Ellender Studies GAO Marriages

the same reasons for my disconnection might remain." His severance was a surprise and a shock to him, he said.

Two Couples Not Questioned

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Billings and Mr. and Mrs. William R. Stewart, who held their jobs while Bibbs lost his, told Senator Ellender they had never made any effort to be kept nor asked "questions about it, one way or another."

Richardson also came to the defense of the Government habit of hiring relatives of present employes, declaring the fact that a person is the relative of an employe known to be good is a recommendation for him.

He said that he had recently given his second cousin, Early T. Bohannon, a job "on the recommendation of department heads," although he knew there would be charges of favoritism.

Willing to Take Rap

"I said then and do now that I'll take the rap for that, for I do not think it is fair his chances should be jeopardized just because he is my relative," he declared. He denied that relatives in the GAO brought pressure to get jobs for their kin, but said they probably often assisted the job seeker by telling him when and where there might be openings.

Mrs. Myrtle Martin charged that she had been passed over in promotions time and again, although "I have worked hard." She was put on work that should pay $2,000 a year, she declared, and kept there for 14 months at her old salary of $1,800.

At the end of the long period, she said, she was "demoted" to her original position. E. W. Bell, chief of the audit division in which Mrs. Martin works, declared she had been kept on the job for 14 months because of the desire to "give her every chance to make good."

Letters in Record

He said he had asked that her apprentice time be extended until there "was no longer any doubt." Bell's testimony was corroborated by various other department heads and numerous letters read into the record.

Richardson said the inaccuracies in Mrs. Martin's auditing sheets on the higher-paying job "would have cost the Government $25,000 a year."

Testimony yesterday morning tended to show that promotions came quicker in new Government agencies than in the old, established ones.

Mental Tests For Autoists

("Mental tests for all altomobile drivers are urged by Dr. Lowell S. Selling, of the psychiatric clinic of the Detroit Traffic Court."—News item.)

1. Is this statement right or wrong: The purpose of a red light is to give color to the American street scene, fool pedestrians and consume more electricity?

2. What's wrong with the following sentence: The motorist slowed down at the busy crossing to give an old lady, trying to cross with a basket of eggs, an even break?

3. Check the clause which properly completes this sentence: Double parking is prohibited because . . . (1) it makes it difficult for bicyclists to ride between the cars; (2) it keeps the inside car from getting out swiftly; (3) it causes dandruff; 4) it ties up traffic.

4. Describe the principal parts of an automobile and state why you consider everything except the horn could be dispensed with.

5. Complete the sentence: The red light showing on the rear of the car ahead means . . . (1) I am going to stop; (2) have you got a match? (3) I am about to take a drink; (4) my radio set is not working.

6. Do you consider you have turned a corner properly when the wheels don't shriek?

7. Which do you think better, to keep alcohol in the radiator in the winter or in the driver the year around?

8. Is this statement right or wrong: A sign reading "School Zone—Go Slow" should be written in simpler language, as most motorists lack college educations?

9. Check the clauses which complete the following sentences:

A—When brakes do not work, the proper thing to do is (1) to take a trolley car; (2) to write a letter to the editor; (3) to telephone the police; (4) to have 'em fixed.

B—A tire with all the rubber worn off should be a sufficient warning that (1) the roads of this country are in bad shape; (2) the New Deal is a failure; (3) you are apt to have a blowout.

10. What is wrong with the following sentences:

Alcohol is very helpful in aiding a man to drive a car, but an olive doesn't mean a thing.

In an emergency the best course is to put both feet on the accelerator and feel around for the brake some other time.

The autoist stopped and went back two blocks because he realized he had passed a sign in a safety-first campaign without reading it.

11. Stopping a car before crossing a railroad track is a good idea because: (1) it gives you a chance to stretch your legs; (2) the railroad expects it of you; (3) any other course makes the engineer nervous. Check which of the above conclusions is correct.

World of Tomorrow

O strange, new world! stupendous fact
Evolved from man's fantastic dream—
How shall we common mortals fit
Into so grandiose a scheme?

Shall we not, now and then, look back,
With sharp, nostalgic pain, and say:
"That was a pleasant world of ours—
The world we lived in yesterday!"

Mystery

Springtime's here with birds and flowers
And bony shad that man devours,
While nature to a large degree
Has hungry dogfish in the sea.
Now, if both dogs and dogfish, too
Are always seeking bones to chew
And dogfish love a tasty dish
Of bones contained in other fish,
Why don't the dogfish make us glad
By eating bones now in the shad?
—Herbert Flansburgh.

$2,866,363 Loaned to Va. Rural Needy

8,614 Farm Families Aided in 4 Years By Federal Agency, Flannagan Told

By the Associated Press.

C. B. Baldwin, Assistant Farm Security Administrator, said yesterday the Administration had made rehabilitation loans to 8,614 needy families in Virginia between the inception of the program in July, 1935, and January 1, 1939.

The loans from emergency relief funds totaled $2,866,363.91, an average of $332.72 per family, Baldwin said in a letter outlining the Administration's program in Virginia to Representative Flannagan (Democrat), Virginia.

Baldwin said the survey showed that 1,383 families in Virginia had been helped through debt adjustments up to January, 1939. Their obligations were scaled down from $3,336,151 to $2,523,421, a total reduction of $812,730, or 24.4 per cent.

As a direct result of these adjustments, he said, a total of $23,652 in back taxes was paid to local Government agencies. In addition, two group cases were adjusted, benefiting 455 farmers. Debts in a total amount of $221,500 were scaled down to $136,000, a reduction of 38.6 per cent.

The report said that while loans to purchase farms authorized by the Bankhead-Jones act have been confined to certain counties in each State, the FSA "will have made approximately 245 such loans in Virginia, aggregating $1,038,763.85 by the end of this fiscal year."

Baltimore, May 18 (AP).—Judge W. Conwell Smith today upheld the city ban on all-night parking, ruling the streets were intended "for the movement of traffic and not for the stationary placement of vehicles."

Disciples Told God Bridges Ravines of Hate

Dr. Nooe Addresses 800 Delegates at Convention Here

"Ravines of hate and misunderstanding" between nations, classes and individuals can only be bridged by a renewed common faith in God, Dr. Roger T. Nooe, of Nashville, declared last night at Ninth Street Christian Church.

President of the 1939 International Convention of the Disciples of Christ, he spoke before more than 800 delegates at the second day's session of the joint convention of the Chesapeake area.

Sharing the program, over which E. S. Sweeney, of Charlottesville, presided, Dr. Clifford H. Jope, host minister and president of the Capital Area Convention, advised that "the Christian Church still has great sources of encouragement in a day when things don't seem quite encouraging."

Stresses Evangelistic Aims

He stressed that the effective church of today, just as the early church, must have an evangelistic mission, passion and program.

The Columbia Heights Christian choir furnished music for the worship program, with William Braithwaite, leader of the National City Christian choir presiding. Devotions were given by the Rev. George D. West, Bristol, Va., and Ernest S. Worden, Martinsburg, W. Va. Introduced by Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller, National City Christian cleric, his friend, Fred Carmichael, prominent member of the church in Great Britain, was a guest.

Another feature of yesterday's meeting was a State missions banquet, with Dr. Sidney M. Bedford, Lynchburg, Va., as speaker. Dr. Bruce L. Kershner, of Indianapolis, and others spoke during the day.

$16,000 Fire Razes State Warehouse

Snow Hill, Md., May 18 (AP).—An attempt to heat asphalt with a blow torch today caused a $16,000 fire which destroyed a tank truck and the State Roads Commission warehouse.

L. H. Steuart, Commisison Secretary, said the State's loss in the building and machinery would be from $5,000 to $6,000. The truck, privately owned, was valued at $10,000.

Steuart said Commission employes told him Luther Jones, driver of the truck, was attempting to heat the asphalt so it would flow from the truck when the road material caught fire. The burning asphalt spread to the truck and the warehouse was soon enveloped in flames.

Md. Pastors Appeal for Defeat Of 'Rotten' Liquor Sales Plan

Bill Establishing County Rum Stores, Signed by O'Conor, Assailed by Bloc of 33 Somerset Clerics

Crisfield, Md., May 18 (AP).—Somerset county ministers, saying public liquor dispensaries would put the county into "the rotten business" of selling liquor, today called for defeat of the plan.

The bill establishing the county system, similar to those in other Eastern Shore counties, was signed by Governor Herbert R. O'Conor yesterday and will be voted upon at the special congressional election June 6.

The ministers' statement, signed by 33 clerics in the county, was issued by the Rev. Charles M. Elderdice, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church.

"If licensed dispensaries are opened in Crisfield and Princess Anne, it will mean that Somerset county has gone into the liquor business, and those who make this possible will be partners in the business. The liquor business, whether legalized or illicit, is a rotten business.

"The argument that the establishment of dispensaries does away with bootlegging has been proven to be utterly fallacious.

"The bootleggers can be put out of business if an aroused public sentiment demands it. Let us close up the places where liquor is being sold now, instead of opening new ones."

O'Conor Vetoes Prince Georges Bill, Two Others

Annapolis, Md., May 18 (AP).—Three local bills affecting Prince Georges County, Cumberland and eastern shore fishermen were vetoed by Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor today.

The Cumberland measure was designed to regulate the wages and hours of members of the police and fire departments. The Governor said its ambiguity might seriously affect the present regulations.

The fishing measure would have allowed netting in the Chester River, Eastern Bay and their tributaries.

House Votes Bill for Md. Waterways

Nine State Projects Included in Act Passed to Senate; No Appropriations

By the Associated Press.

The House yesterday passed and sent to the Senate the omnibus rivers and harbors authorization—first step in obtaining improvements for nine Maryland waterways.

The bill did not appropriate any money for the work. If the bill is finally enacted, the money must be obtained from the next Congress.

Projects authorized, but not financed by the bill, included:

Deepening Mill Creek channel, dredging Black Walnut Harbor channel, dredging chanel and providing anchorage basin in Town Creek, dredging channel and mooring basin in Lower Thoroughfare, channel and mooring basin in Duck Point Cove, dredging channel to Island Creek, St. Georges Island; channeling St. Catherines Sound, enlarging boat harbor and deepening channel in Susquehanna River at Havre de Grace, and providing channel across the Eastern Shore of Virginia from Chesapeake Bay to Chincoteaque Bay.

The bill would also authorize Army engineers to survey Ross Cove in the Magothy River; Finneys Creek in Accomac County, on the Eastern Shore of Virginia, and Helens Creek, in Calvert County.

Autopsy on Baby Finds No Clew In Fire Death

An autopsy on the body of 3-month-old Ellen MacCrea yesterday failed to disclose any new lead to aid police in their investigation of the infant's death in a fire at her home in Colmar Manor, Md., last Sunday, Dr. G. J. Hageage said last night.

The child's body was exhumed from the Greenwood Cemetery on orders of Winship Wheatley, jr., Prince Georges County State's attorney, after two persons had been arrested in connection with the case.

Meanwhile, it was reported that agents of the FBI who had been working on a closely guarded phase of the case, had decided to drop their investigation. County authorities, however, are continuing with their probe. A coroner's hearing is set for next Wednesday.

High School Girls Give Recipes for Quick Breads

Cheese and Date Combination Gets Second Award

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN ran away from home when 17 years old, spent his last pennies for three "great puffy rolls," and went down the street, munching one and carrying the other two under his arm. Young people of about the same age are today interested in crunchy breadstuffs, as evidenced by the recipes submitted by junior and senior high school students. The three R's are not the only subjects given thought by the students, for the suggestions which came from them are the kind to put anyone's appetite in good humor.

Miss Drazin

Lace Creation

Graduaton day is an important day and the festivities that attend it are already in the mind of one enthusiastic senior of Central High School. Helen Drazin, 4208 Eighth street northwest, captured the first prize of $3 with her "lace" design for bread. Miss Drazin sent in the following letter: "For something that is very delicate and exceedingly good, I think lace puffs deserve a place at graduation parties. Here is my recipe, which is in the never-fail class."

Lace Puffs

Scald 5 tablespoons white corn meal, with 5 tablespoons of boiling water. Cool this mixture until it is lukewarm. Combine ¼ teaspoon salt and 4 egg whites. Whip the egg whites until they are stiff. Fold them into the batter. Drop it from a spoon onto a greased baking sheet. Bake in a slow oven, 325 degrees, for about 30 minutes. This makes 20 two-inch puffs.

An Extra Special

Bread chock full of cheese and nuts is a variety to enhance any meal. Miss Margaret Osborne, 415 Gallatin street northwest, Washington, submitted a recipe which would be grand toasted for breakfast, eaten "as is" for lunch or supper, and can be made into dainty sandwiches that would beckon one to the tea table. Miss Osborne, who is the winner of a $2 prize, is a student at Roosevelt High Schol, and writes that the bread made according to this recipe is easy to make and delicious to taste.

Cheese and Date Bread

Pour ¾ cup boiling water over 8 ounces of dates, cut fine. Let stand for 5 minutes. Mix and sift 1¾ cups flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder, and ½ cup sugar together. Add date mixture and 1 egg beaten, and 1 cup grated American cheese. Mix well. Pour into a greased loaf pan and bake in a moderate oven for 50 minutes.

Corn Innovation

In the Old South it was the custom to have two recipes for the hot breads, one for every day and one for company, the only difference being that the company recipe was a bit richer and given a few extra beatings, but corn bread made according to the formula submitted by Ann Myers, 5623 Thirteenth street northwest, Washington, D. C., winner of a $1 prize, will answer for both every day and company, too. Miss Myers, a student at Roosevelt Senior High School, says that the corn bread is served as waffles—"a grand way to make further use of the waffle iron."

Miss Myers

Dixie Corn Bread

Mix 1½ cups corn meal, ¾ cup bread flour, 4 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon soda, and 2 tablespoons sugar. Beat 2 eggs with 1½ cups buttermilk. Combine the mixtures and add 3 tablespoons melted butter. Heat the waffle iron about 6 minutes. Fry until they are golden brown and serve as waffles.

Cerise Expression

A treat for lovers of cherries is a variance in muffins made by the addition of cherries to the muffin batter. Ruth Fullmer, 2219 Minnesota avenue southeast, Washington, D. C., winner of a $1 prize, submitted a cherry muffin recipe. Miss Fullmer is a student at Anacostia High School.

Miss Fullmer

Cherry Muffins

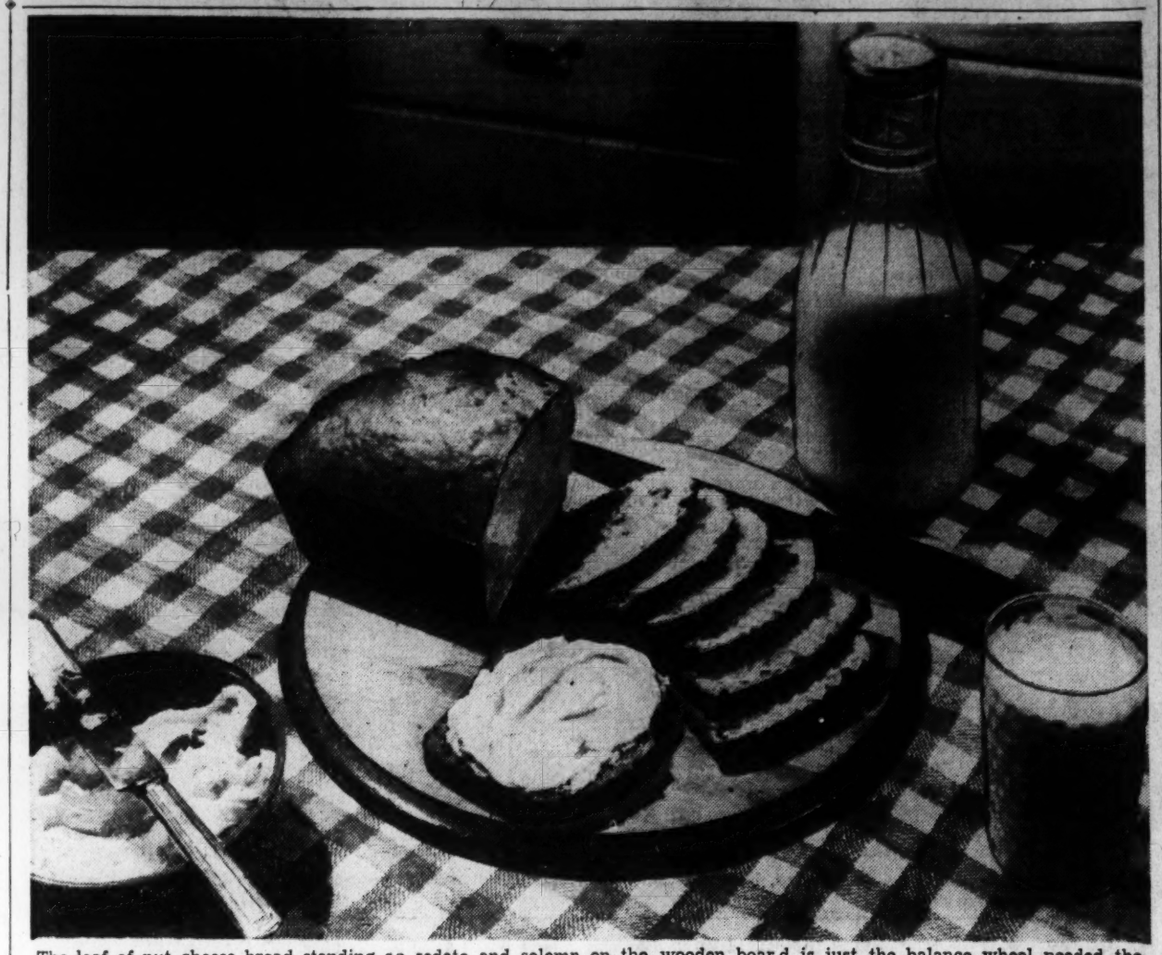
Sift 2 cups of flour with 3 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Add sugar to 1 cup of pitted cherries and let stand for 15 minutes. Beat 2 eggs and add 2 cups milk. Add to the dry ingredients and mix well. Add ¼ cup of melted butter and the cherries which have been drained very thoroughly, and then dredged in flour. Bake in greased muffin tins in a moderate oven from 20 to 25 minutes.

Social Register Biscuits

An old favorite with a novel touch is the feathery orange biscuit recipe submitted by Betty Dyer, 2530 Q street northwest. Miss Dyer, who is the winner of a $1.00 prize with her appealing form of biscuits, is a student at Western High School. Biscuits made by her recipe will certainly lend sophistication to the breadstuff, and rightly belong in the social register of biscuits.

Feathery Orange Biscuits

Mix and sift together 2 cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, and ¾ teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon sugar. Add 3 tablespoons butter and work it into the flour with a fork until it is distributed through the floor in particles the size of uncooked rice grains. Add 1 teaspoon grated orange peel. Break 1 egg into ½ cup milk and beat it up with a fork. Add to flour mixture gradually mixing it with a fork until the dough is soft and easy to handle, but not sticky. Turn dough onto a slightly floured board. Pat or roll the dough out to about ½ inch in thickness. Cut out with biscuit cutter, first dipped in flour. Place on greased pan, about 1 inch apart. Just before putting biscuits in to bake, dip tablets of sugar into orange juice and press one dipped tablet into the center of each biscuit, pressing down well. Bake in hot oven, 450 degrees, 12 to 15 minutes or until brown.



The loaf of nut cheese bread standing so sedate and solemn on the wooden board is just the balance wheel needed the next time the "gang" drops in. Serve it with a glass of cold milk, for it is attractive, very little trouble to make, and tastes so good that it will put any party over. The Post recipe contest for junior and senior high school students, whose theme was quick breads, brought the recipe for the nutritious bread pictured above

Spiced Hamburg Makes Tasty Dish

Deviled hamburgers are a spicy variation from the old favorite variety. Combine 1½ pounds chuck steak, ground, 1-3 cup chili sauce, 2 teaspoons each of prepared mustard, bottled horseradish, minced onion and Worcestershire-type sauce and ½ teaspoon salt. Shape into 10 cakes about 2 inches in diameter. Brown in hot fat in a skillet for 4 minutes on each side or broil in a broiler oven preheated for 10 minutes for 4 minutes on each side. Serves 6. To serve 2 or 3 make half this recipe. For open sandwiches make half this recipe. Toast 6 slices of bread on one side. Spread the untoasted side of each slice with hamburger mixture and broil 8 minutes. Serves 6.

These hamburgers are splendid served with tomato juice, string beans, pineapple slices, butterscotch arrowroot pudding and coffee for dinner.

Baked Alaska Fine to Top Off Springtime Meal

Fresh green peas Parsley potatoes
Cress salad
Baked Alaska Coffee

Baked Alaska

Baked Alaska is made with a thin sheet of sponge cake, 1 quart brick ice cream and a meringue. To make the meringue, beat 3 egg whites stiff and add 3 tablespoons powdered sugar gradually, beating until well blended. Add ½ teaspoon vanilla. Cover a wooden board with white paper. Arrange sponge cake on paper, ice cream on cake, having cake extend ½ inch beyond cream. Ice with meringue. (The board, paper and meringue are poor conductors of heat and prevent the cream from melting.) Brown quickly in hot oven or under broiler. Slip from paper on ice cream platter and serve immediately.

Drop into deep hot fat and fry until light brown. Drain on glazed paper and dust with powdered sugar.

Glass Ovenware Looks Presentable At the Table

By The Post Food Editor

GLASS OVENWARE is a boon to the housewife. It is one cooking utensil which can go to the dinner table without a blush for its appearance. Glass cooking dishes absorb a great amount of heat and they wash like a charm and never retain a trace of any odor. The glass dishes are attractive for serving and handled frames of chrome and silver plate can be bought for the various shaped baking dishes and pie plates, into which the hot dish can be set to be carried to the table for serving. All-glass skillets for frying over flame are just the thing for chops, steaks and other foods cooked in this manner. You attach a chrome handle and it is easily and safely carried to the table. Hot foods should be served hot and these glass cooking utensils are capable of just that.

Glass baking dishes are also an economy in that they never discolor or are in any way affected by the material cooked in them. The same dish can therefore be used for many different purposes—a glass bread "tin" is good for cakes, meat loaf, scalloped dishes and desserts. Heat-proof glass utensils should never be handled with wet cloths while they are hot, nor should they, while hot, be set down on any wet surface or be subjected to a sudden dousing in water.

Peach-Pickle Relish

Peach-Pickle Freeze is a relish to accompany the meat course. Mash 10 halves canned peaches and place alternately with layers of 4 sweet cucumbers thinly sliced. Freeze in refrigerator in custard cups. This relish keeps cold throughout the meal when taken directly from the refrigerator and served in the individual cups in which it was frozen.

Your Figure, Madame!

Bea Lillie Plays, Eats And Relaxes as She Likes and Stays Young

By Ida Jean Kain.

YOU DON'T just wake up some morning and find yourself glamorous, according to a split-second analysis of this hardworking but still elusive term given, on request, by the famous Beatrice Lillie.

And, furthermore, Miss Lillie would like to know what is glamour, anyway, and who decides who is glamorous. As she put it, "Surely one does not wake up some morning and say, 'Now, I'm glamorous.' It must be the press!"

What she has to say about a woman's most fascinating age is just as unexpected: "A woman's most fascinating age? Well, it all depends—it's very fascinating to be 18. Or 25. And 30 is divine. I wouldn't get into the 40's . . . "

Loves Bread and Cheese

That reservation may give you a clew—Miss Lillie's appearance certainly does not—and for general information I asked how she went about keeping so nice and slim and young-looking.

She said promptly—"I love food. I love potatoes—when they're cold, too. And cheese. There's nothing I like better than bread and cheese."

But, stubbornly pursuing the subject, I discovered that she eats only two meals a day, and small ones at that, and that she does not like desserts. So she doesn't overeat and she doesn't get extra calories in sweets.

And you could very well copy the exercise program she declares she does not have. She walks about three miles a day—because she likes to walk—and she keeps saying to herself, "Shoulders up, shoulders up!" It sounds like exercise to me.

Does What She Likes

The ability to relax explains the absence of crowsfeet in a woman's face once she is past 30 and it turns out that Miss Lillie (who, by the way, seems delightfully unconcerned about whether she stays very young-looking) spends practically all her week-ends in the country, which she loves. Besides, it offers a chance for tennis and swimming, both of which she enjoys very much.

The theme of all this, it would appear, is that the English comedienne does about as she pleases. She walks because she likes to walk. She also likes to play outdoors, is addicted to restful week-ends, and has the habit of eating moderately. It is quite all right to love food as long as you do not eat too much of it!

And when you are planning your program and putting your food and exercise habits on a sensible basis, it might work out better if you threw in a little nonsense and some of the things you really enjoy doing. It's possible they might pass for exercise. At any rate, have as much fun as you can and your new routine will last longer.

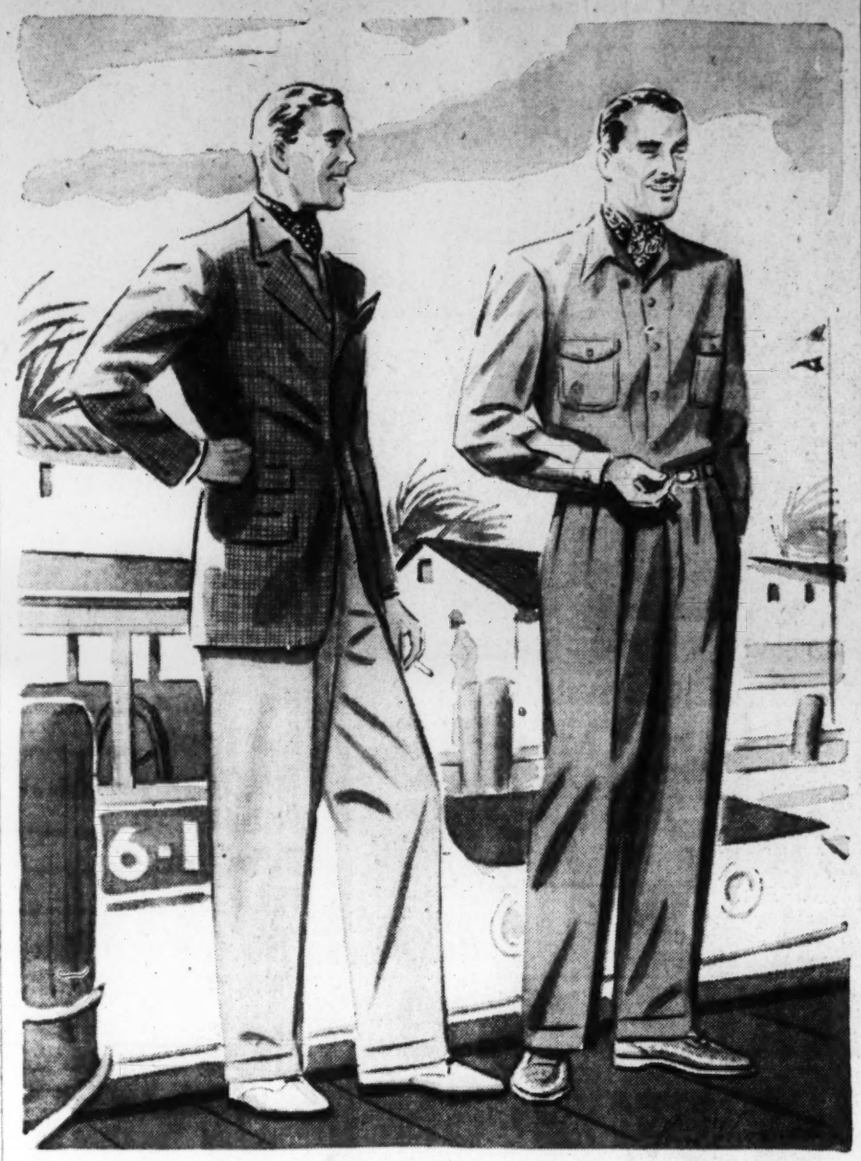
What a Life—In Leisure Suits!



If you're youthful in age or outlook, the mix-matched sports togs at left will be becoming, also as comfortable as last year's trusty old ducks. The soft Shetland wool, brightly plaided and casually draped, plus the well-cut gabardine slacks are first aids to the figure of the tall, rangy man who is flattered by contrasting colors and fabrics. The older man of bulky build (right) looks more youthful and slimmer in smooth fabrics of neutral coloring and pattern. His suit is air-cooled Nassau cloth, with fine blue checks making the shirt, and darker blue checks, the slacks. His shoes are hurraches of Mexican weave. His companion wears canary buckskins, crepe soles in burgundy

Timid Man Must Steel Self for Gay Colors If He Is to Join Style Parade This Summer

Leisure Fashions Are Buoyant and Fresh in Outlook

Trend Is Away From 'Uniform' For Conservative Male

News relating to men's fashions appears every Friday on this page.

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

COURAGE of a high order may be required this summer by the timid male. That is the prediction of a local arbiter of men's fashions, who maintains that the main sartorial need of the average man is to overcome his fear of conspicuousness in dress.

MARSHALL ADAMS

This men's stylist went on to explain that men's summer fashions, especially the week-end leisure ones, are bouyant, colorful and fresh in outlook. So much so, in fact, that the man on the street will have to get used to them in a hurry, or else be out of the contemporary fashion scene. "In another two or three years men's clothes will be almost as imaginative as women's," the expert prophesied, and added that in the past men have worn "only carbon copy uniforms which have psychologically subdued their individual personalities."

"Mix and Match"

Men's sun togs and country sport clothes have a dash and individuality this season that has won them a "glamour boy" caption. However, hardy virile stuff goes into these mix-match mates that stores in Washington are recommending for either prep school boys planning vacations home or men looking toward country week-ends.

"Mix and match" is the first rule in helping your husband choose his play suits or leisure-hour clothes. By that we don't mean to omit the basic town mohair or cool tropic cloth from his wardrobe. We mean augment his everyday suit with at least one good quality sports coat. It may be striped, checked, herringboned or plaided. The three-notched lapel is the newest in jacket styles with the single-breasted, loose chested cut, and the big broad-shouldered look. These styles are godsends for the meek little man who wants to look big.

Couple Pair of Slacks

With this good-looking casual coat as a starter, one or two pairs of slacks are practical and will fool his friends into thinking he has a Menjou wardrobe. Mix the color of the coat with lighter toned slacks in sleek wool gabardine. Pale buff or tan, for instance, with a brown checked coat and a plain oxford shirt is reliable. With the same coat a gray-green washable cotton slack is fine for easing worries over whether his getting dirty on picnics and clambakes. Despite many weaves for these mix-match outfits, all the fabrics are air cooled; many are crease resistant, and some even take to sudsing. Amusing ascots done in printed tie silk, and gay—very gay—hurraches (braided Mexican hide sandals), or brightly hued saddle oxfords are nominally priced now and chic adjuncts to the week-end sports wardrobe.

Do You Know His Type

These items for your spouse's wardrobe are all well and good as a preparation for discarding his "uniform." But he may be "off" in build, his shoulders may be narrow, or he may be a mountain of fat. So get to know his type before you put him into a gayly checked sharkskin play suit. Here are a few things to remember:

If he has good arms and well-developed muscles, put him in short-sleeved sports shirts. If not, see that he wears one of the comfortable air-cooled gabardine leisure suits with long sleeves and a conservative ascot of contrasting color (to hide that Adam's apple).

Blue for Blonds

If he's tall and fair of coloring and hair, the clean Dutch blue used in the newest pin-checked cotton sports suits will bring out the blue in his eyes. If dark and on the debonair side, put him in white linens or striped seersuckers, whether you like the cleaner's bill or not. (If you're clever that way, many of the newest sport togs are sanforized shrunk and washable, and a dollar for the cleaner can thus be saved by doing them up at home.)

If he's a man of height, but too lean and wan, build him up with boldly plaided or checked jackets and light gabardine slacks. Some of these gabardines are irridescent in their pale green, gray or tan-bark tints. These cool-looking slacks often increase the appearance of size, which is good for this type, which usually has broomsticks for legs.

If he's a butter ball, broader than long, give him the reverse technique. Slim him down with dark, cool navy Palm Beach or tropic fabric suits. Create height with quiet stripes, running vertically, of course. Navy or dark brown in dull surfaced textures are slimming.

If he's a man of bulk, but a high boy also, put him in stripes, but have them spaced about ¾ of an inch apart. This type (often the big businessman) looks imposing during his "relaxed" week-ends in a brusque soft Shetland sports jacket, when worn with tan slacks and browncand white wing-tipped shoes.

Master New Card Tricks

HOW TO entertain friends? Tell thrilling fortunes! You can soon learn the card meanings, size up lucky, unlucky cards.

Nell's fortune promises fair weather ahead. "Expect a letter about money," you begin, spotting the Three of Diamonds.

"You may get a legacy!" A romantic gift, promises the Two of Hearts, maybe an engagement ring. And the Queen of Hearts is tops as a lucky card.

But Ralph's fortune—alas! He has a storm or two to face. Spades mostly are trouble cards—the Four warns of bad news, the Seven of a faithless friend. The Jack of Clubs, too, is bad luck. But happier cards will follow—perhaps a Six of Diamonds, a change in fortune.

Business Girl Brings Talents To Home Life

Usually Produces Comfort and Order In House

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WHEN A business woman forsakes her big mahogany desk for a husband and a cookstove, she's usually in for lots of readjustments.

After that first rosy glow clears away, she generally finds herself bogged down way beyond her depths—defeated by work she never regarded as requiring anything special in the way of ability. But she soon finds out, as she rolls up her sleeves and starts to learn the profession of homemaking, that it takes more talent to make a real success of homemaking than business. To the surprise of everybody, because she realizes this, she stands a very good chance of doing a better job of it than the little domestic wren who knows enough about housekeeping to get by.

At least that was the story of Lois M., whose home is as nicely run as any I've been in for a long while. The mechanics of the household are smooth because they're well planned—Lois spent a lot of time figuring out not just how to do things, but how to do them most efficiently. The food is in the gourmet category because Lois appreciates the difference between the plunkety-plunk meat-and-potato menu and the subtler flavors of really fine cooking.

And the house is restful but not monotonous. It's been cleverly thought through before instead of after the money was spent. The walls are painted pale gray throughout the house and all the main rooms are carpeted in light gray. Think what spacious tranquil effect that alone would give. In the living room this is accented with jade green and carnelian tones in draperies and furniture coverings. In the dining room, the contrast shade is lemon yellow and copper. The guest room plays on tints of peach with white and turquoise. Lois has cerise and pale blue as the accents in the master bedroom.

Turkey, King of Fowls, No Longer a Winter Season Food

Care Must Be Used in the Selection Of Bird; Soft-Shell Crabs Now in Abundance With Prices Low

By The Post Food Editor

KEEPING UP with the food procession is interesting as there always are new items to help the budget. Go to market and see the products offered for there is great satisfaction in knowing what you are buying and appreciating the relative values.

Tukrey, the king of fowls, does not yield a bit to the seasons. Because of the increased production, they now are less expensive. Poultry in some form is a necessary part of every well-balanced diet, because it contains body-building materials of high quality. If your selection is wise in choosing the turkey, he is a noble bird, young and nondieted, with an admirable but nonstreamlined figure. There are as many ways of roasting turkey as there are members of that majestic tribe. The best arguments in the world can be introduced by the mere mention of turkey-roasting methods, but any reliable cookbook will tell you how to roast them. A delicious way to serve left-over turkey—if there is any—is as turkey salad pies.

Turkey Salad Pies

Prepare pastry for 4 individual pie shells, using any standard recipe. Roll ¼-inch thick and sprinkle lightly with grated American cheese. Roll cheese into dough. Line individual pans with dough and bake in the oven at a temperature of 475 degrees for 8 minutes.

Blend, 2 cups diced turkey, 1 teaspoon minced onion, 1 cup diced celery, 2 hard-cooked eggs and ¼ cup chopped pecans and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon salt. Place in refrigerator to chill. When ready to serve, mix with ½ cup mayonnaise and chill. Place in shells. Garnish with wedges of cranberry sauce on a bed of lettuce or watercress.

Softshell crabs are now in abundance in the markets, and are being offered at a very low price. Crabs which have cast off their old hard shells are known as "softshelled crabs" during the weeks their new shells are growing on them. The sooner after the shedding process they are eaten the better they are. Crabs must be alive when bought. To prepare, wash carefully, lift up flaps on each side of back shell, remove "feathers" found under them. Remove "apron," the pointed piece at lower part of shell. Dry well. Softshelled crabs are fried, boiled, broiled and are delicious when deviled.

Place the crabs in boiling water to cover. Add 1 tablespoon salt and cover the pan closely. Boil for 20 minutes. Remove the meat from the shells and combine with one-third as much buttered crumbs, season with salt and pepper and curry powder if desired. Refill the shells and brown the tops in a moderate oven, 375 degrees. Serve with tartar sauce. Other seasonings such as Worcestershire sauce and mace also may be used.

Iceberg lettuce is coming from California and Arizona in such quantities that the market price is especially low just now. There is a full meal in a lettuce bowl, and it is a fine dish for evening suppers. Cold meats and cheeses, chilled leftover vegetables all take on new appetite appeal when combined with crisp iceberg lettuce and tossed with an enticing dressing.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Boarding School Girl Makes Mistake Which "Leads To Heartbreak;" Asks How to Be Saved

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Like many other young girls of today, I have made the mistake which leads to heartbreak unless immediate steps are taken. But, unlike many of these unfortunate girls, I have no one to turn to. Mother would never understand and it would kill Dad if he knew. But I must have advice, before it is too late. Where can I go? What can I do?

About the boy: I am not in love with him, nor he with me. It was simply a moment's folly . . . But I can't tell him. He graduates from college next month and has a career ahead of him and, if he knew, it would ruin his entire life. I couldn't marry him anyway, because I am only a junior in high school. There seems to be nothing for me to do. Yet there must be. I can't have the baby, Miss Haworth, and I can't leave the school—a strict girls' boarding school here in Washington, where we are watched very closely.

I am imploring you to help me, and I would be so terribly grateful if you would publish advice in your column as soon as possible. It is impossible for me to disclose my identity, but I shall be watching your column anxiously, waiting for your reply. (Oh, WHY are 16-year-old girls so susceptible to emotions, which have such serious consequences?) Anxiously.

PAT P.

Source of Salvation

DEAR PAT P.: Please believe me when I say that the only safe-and-sane first step you can take, toward bringing this deplorable situation under control is that of making a full confidante of your mother. Perhaps she can never fully comprehend the motives and pressures (emotional and circumstantial) which precipitated the "moment's folly" with its punitive consequences—but she will be, at least, enough of a realist to recognize the fact that her child is in a perilous predicament which compels immediate, level-headed assistance from those who purport to be her best and oldest friends (her moral and social guardians; her parents, in a word)—if unnecessary anguish for all concerned, both directly and indirectly, is to be averted.

After several years' experience in sifting human problems for possibly saving solutions, I have arrived at the conclusion—based on a working knowledge of the average parent's performance in such a dilemma—that the teen age girl's best friend is, indeed, her mother, when this type of tragedy must be dealt with. In other comparable cases referred to my attention, when the girl finally decided—always against her hysterical, terror-stricken first impulse to the contrary—to confide in her mother (or whatever relative stood her in a mother's stead), it developed (as I was later informed by follow-up letters) that she thereby acquired an invaluable ally and advocate, who took the lead in working out the problem along lines that might never have occurred to the girl herself, and which she might not have been able to manage without this particular champion's protective assistance.

Also, I have had letters from mothers of such girls, expressing profound gratitude that their daughters did turn to them in their time of need, and saying how doubly deplorable the situation could have been, and would have been, if the girl had acted on the assumption that her parents could not be counted on to stand by her when she most sorely needed friendly aid and counsel. A few such letters have been published here, at the writers' insistence and with the generous forethought that they might invoke a similarly saving understanding between any other mothers and daughters into whose lives this immemorial calamity might intrude.

No 16-year-old boarding-school girl has either the worldly wisdom or the immediately available material means required for handling this kind of problem in such a way as to minimize its potentially injurious effects upon her life. Moreover, no reputable, dependable, qualified source of help—of a social welfare, layman or scientific sort—would undertake the grave responsibility of plan-making in such an emergency, when the central figure is of minor age, without the cooperation, consent and approval of the girl's parents or guardians.

So, if you would avoid falling into the hands of unscrupulous quacks and false friends—thus finding your second, or last, state worse than your present state—turn to your mother in this crisis. As co-instigator of your existence, and as a person answerable to God and to society for your moral and social well-being until you attain to your majority, she has an obligation in conscience to befriend you in your trouble. But I am sure that her help will spring spontaneously from the heart, once she has learned the facts.

If you will be going home for vacation, simultaneously with the close of the school term, defer your confession until then. But if, under ordinary circumstances, you would not be joining her, but would be shipped off immediately to a girls' camp, say, then write her at once, telling her that you are in desperate jeopardy and MUST have her help, since no one else can save you. It should not be necessary to go into detail; it would be best not to, in fact, as the letter might fall into other hands. But if she has an iota of maternal intuition, she will read the frantic distress signal conveyed between the lines, and will come flying to your side.

There is no additional advice which I can give you; and if you were my daughter, in this predicament, it is the advice which I would want a disinterested counselor to give. Perhaps if you will present this column to your mother, at the time of unburdening your heart, it may help her to better understand why you have found the courage to trust in her, in spite of failing her expectations.

Doctor Denies Pregnancy Causes Decay of Teeth

The belief that pregnancy causes teeth to decay and that only emergency dental treatment should be given an expectant mother, together with other widespread opinions about the care of teeth during pregnancy, are nothing but "superstitious tales," Prof. Daniel E. Ziskin, of the school of dental and oral surgery of Columbia University declares, reporting a recently completed investigation of some of the theories about the dental condition of expectant mothers

Pregnancy does not cause teeth to decay, although cavities that have not been painful previously may suddenly start to ache at this time, Dr. Ziskin said. Neither were teeth found to decay more rapidly during pregnancy than in normal periods. Studying more than 1,500 cases, Dr. Ziskin discovered no reason why dental work should not be done on an expectant mother as long as constitutional complications do not exist.

Salad Season Calls Forth 'Mix-Your-Own' Enthusiasts

A salad that can be as gay as Joseph's coat is the type the happy miss is mixing in the picture above. Certainly this is the "top" season for serving a tossed salad and no special technique is necessary to achieve it, as the imagination can run riot when assembling it

Leafy Greens Top List of Piquant Ingredients; French Dressing Is Favorite of Epicures; Wooden Bowl Is Preferred by Many

By The Post Food Editor.

CRISP, CRINKLY and delectably cool—there's something about a salad prepared at the table or carried in from the kitchen that wins a vote for green toss-ups. As an inspiration to salad-tossers, the shops show a tempting line-up of bowls in wood, glass, pottery and china with wooden spoons and fork accompaniments. Experts insist that the wood bowl is the thing, as it is less likely to bruise the tender greens. According to an old tradition, the wooden salad bowl should never be washed. If this is against your idea of cleanliness, compromise by washing with warm water, but never with soapsuds.

Mixed greens top the list for summer piquancy. Fresh young leafy greens, besides leaf and head lettuce, such as chicory, endive, kale, escarole, water cress, romaine, dandelion greens, beet tops, parsley, spinach, Swiss chard, and green and red cabbage, are all naturals for the salad bowl. Carrots, white turnips and parsnips are also vegetables to give tang and color to the salad, and also a crunchy quality. For garnish, or even as a part of the salad proper, red radishes, tomatoes, chives, cucumbers and onions are all vegetables that like each other's company. For the extras which may be added to the dressing, or as a garnish, there is parsley, green pepper, ripe or green olives, pickles, anchovies, hard-cooked eggs, and even pomegranate seeds.

Plenty of Dressing

Salad epicures agree that the best dressing for the salad bowl is French, and that it should be mixed through the ingredients and not just drizzled over the top. Don't miss the fun of mixing your own dressing some time, although there are excellent dressings on the market.

A chief "must" in the green salad is a faint trace of garlic. Rub a clove of it around the bowl before dropping in the greens, or it may be shaken in the bottle with the dressing. The French custom is to rub a crust of dry bread with a sliced clove, leaving the bread in the bowl until the tossing is finished. Don't ever chop garlic and add it as another ingredient.

The key to salad success is to have everything crisp and cold. Prepare things at least an hour in advance and chill in the refrigerator until ready to serve. Tear or break the ingredients into bits, but not so fine as to give a chopped-up look. Hash is a grand dish, but not in the salad bowl.

Simple Recipes

There are many recipes for French dressing, but any kind is simple to make. Either blend all the dry ingredients in a bowl, then beat in the oil and acid with a rotary or electric beater, or put all the ingredients into a bottle and shake. Just before serving shake again. The following recipe is a basic one for all kinds of variations:

French Dressing

Beat the following ingredients in a bowl or shake thoroughly in a bottle: 1 teaspoon sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon paprika, ½ teaspoon mustard, ½ cup salad oil, 4 tablespoons vinegar or 2 tablespoons vinegar and 2 tablespoons lemon juice.

Variations for French Dressing

Roquefort Dressing—Add 2 tablespoons crumbled Roquefort cheese to basic recipe.

Borsch Dressing—Add 2 hard-cooked, chopped eggs, ½ cup chopped cooked beets, 2 tablespoons minced onion, 3 sprigs of parsley, minced, and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce to basic recipe.

Ripe Olive Dressing—Add 8 chopped ripe olives to basic recipe.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay,

The Hard Road

I.

It is so easy to practice the virtues of womanhood,
To be gracious, expansive, overflowing with warm friendliness,
When I am wearing a complete new outfit that I know is becoming,
And someone has just paid me a compliment that has given wings to my spirit.

II.

It is so simple to be unfailingly cheerful, gaily expectant,
(As a woman should) when I have just had a new permanent,
That behaves as it ought to, and when I know my new haircut
Has the approval of friends, and bears the unmistakable stamp of tomorrow.

III.

It is no feat at all to be kind, gentle and tactful
In the feminine tradition, to cooperate, give and surrender
In home, club and office when I carry in my heart the bright knowledge
That a few hours hence I will be with someone who means more than all of life's turmoil.

IV.

It is an effortless thing to give eager and generous enthusiasm
To the strivings of others, to delight in their triumphs,
To keep self in the background, the jungle behind me,
When my own boat is sailing life's stream all serenely and smoothly.

V.

It is so easy to fall into the weaknesses of femininity,
To be catty and critical, always add the "yes, but" to my comments,
When I know that my hat makes me vapid, my clothes are last season's
And that nowhere I go will I win any heart-warming smiles of approval.

VI.

It is a difficult thing not to get crabbed, cranky and fussy,
Overconcerned about trifles, and bossy and nagging,
When life is so hurried and drab, a treadmill of duties,
And I never can lie on a chaise longue and relax like the charmers in pictures.

VII.

It is so tempting to find self-satisfaction in the foibles and frailties
Of feminine enemies or even of friends and acquaintances,
When I feel in myself a lack of the fullness and richness of life,
And I know that I carry in my soul a great loneliness.

VIII.

It is so natural to lapse into petty jealousies, vulgar competing
Over friends, jobs, offices, honors and social ambitions,
When that is the law of the feminine world where perfect security
Still is a stake to be fought for, not a seed to be inwardly planted and tended.

Woman Is Tired Of Congratulations On 'Man's Job'

Chicago (INS).—Mrs. Edith Jarvis Alden is tired of being congratulated because she does a "man's job" well. The only woman in American industry who holds a major executive position in this country's complicated railroad system believes that a job is a job, that it's neuter and that sex and its ugly head have no part in the matter.

"I never feel complimented when people tell me I have a masculine mind, either," said the slim, attractive secretary and assistant treasurer of the Burlington Railroad, whose appointment to her present job six months ago made railroad, industrial and feminist history.

A Woman's New York

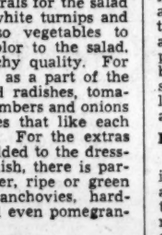
By Alice Hughes

Theda Bara, First Movie Vamp, Has English Accent; Kitty Gordon, of Beautiful Back, Fame Attends Tea Looking Like Fashion Plate

New York, May 18.

MY BEST FRIENDS do not dare call me "the home-loving type," and my mad business would prevent such devotion even if I were. That sort of thing I leave to the helpmate, who likes to call himself "the aged Murray Hill recluse." Freudians would label him an ace introvert, while I am by nature and profession an extrovert of the deepest dye.

Even so, the spring social "season" seems in a fair way to bow Miss Hughes down. Busied though we all are with visits to the Fair, and coping with the delightful cooking of a score of Old World nations, things are hotting up right here on the island. The past week has seen me at a lovely party for the beloved Laurette Taylor, immortal "Peg o' My Heart," whose stage comeback this season in "Outward Bound" has delighted all. This shindig was tossed by the publisher, Conde Nast, whose parties are brilliant and famous. In fact, a bid to one is something like getting a smack on the shoulder with the sword of the British King. And then there was the tea in honor of two noted stars of another day, Miss Kitty Gordon and Miss Theda Bara, first of the movie vamps, and long since in retirement as Mrs. Charles J. Brabin.



ALICE HUGHES

Robert Dudley, the designer, gave this afternoon orgy, and it was a delight. Miss Gordon, publicized years ago as the proud owner of the world's loveliest back, looked simply exquisite, and certainly one of the most chic women I have ever seen. Theda, who was Theodosia Goodman, of Cincinnati, in her prefilm era, was good company, and spoke in a deep English way, owing to some years of residence in Britain. Youngsters and veterans were mingled at this party, and some fine reminiscing and dirt-dishing was done. Sorry to say, Kitty's world-famous back was not on view. Oh, Gotham's mad life! Party and party, and then another. Now I must off to the opening of the Scandoslavian building at the Fair. Next stop Bellevue Hospital!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Oh, yes; speaking of big-shot events, there was the high-hat opening of our new Museum of Modern Art, the other night. Boy oh boy, was society's cream there, and right on top! The women at these affairs are divided into two groups—the ultrachic and perfectly groomed, and the other large class which is so rich that it can be as tacky as it pleases and still rate curtsys from the canaille—including me. This museum is a Rockefeller project, and so I got a terrific laugh when, on one of the crowded terraces, I found a dollar bill on the floor. Could it have been planted there by one of the junior Rockefellers? After all, their grandpappy, you remember, passed out mere dimes! . . .

Disabled Veterans of Three Wars Forget Years on White House Lawn

Soldier of 1860's Does a Jig To Marine Band Music; Mrs. Wilson First to Greet the Roosevelts

By Elizabeth Henney.

"THE LINE is growing shorter every year," was the comment on all sides yesterday afternoon when President and Mrs. Roosevelt held their annual garden party for the disabled veterans on the rolling south lawn of the Executive Mansion. Yet the sun slanting through the trees reflected smiles on every face, and one Civil War veteran expressed the spirit of the afternoon, when he danced an impromptu jig on the grass to a lively tune from the Marine Band.

Heading the line of veterans of the Civil War, Spanish War and World War, was the widow of the man who was President during the last great conflict, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. Wearing a beige silk suit and large picture hat to match, she was the first to greet President and Mrs. Roosevelt, who stood on the lawn, just a short distance below, and to the right of the south portico.

Following Mrs. Wilson came the Assistant Secretary of War and Mrs. Louis Johnson; Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, head of the Veterans' Administration, and Mrs. Hines; Miss Mabel Boardman, head of the American Red Cross; Gen. Malin Craig, chief staff, and Mrs. Craig; Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, and Mrs. Leahy, and a long line of distinguished guests, gray ladies, nurses and veterans.

Mrs. Roosevelt had chosen for the afternoon a romany plaid chiffon, fashioned with a fitted waist and a long, full skirt which swept the grass. A green belt gave a color accent, and she wore a white hat with a moderate stovepipe crown, medium brim and veil.

Cabinet Members Seen in Throng

Though only three of the Cabinet members were there—Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins—several Cabinet wives were on hand during the afternoon. Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, was gowned in a navy blue silk suit with a dusty pink georgette waist, and a matching pink veil on her navy blue hat.

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, wore a black and white print with a dark hat and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring looked extremely chic in a dubonnet redingote outfit with hat and accessories to match.

Many Notables Among Guests

Mrs. Malin Craig was gowned in a spring print frock of navy blue against a white background, and wore a balibuntl hat of navy with a ribbon trim of cyclamen. Mrs. Leahy was in a print frock also, of gay colors on a dark background, a dubonnet hat and accessories to match.

Mrs. Louis Johnson was smartly turned out in a navy blue coat frock with clever pink touches, and a large navy blue picture hat. Admiral Ross McIntire was accompanied by Mrs. McIntire, who was gowned in a dubonnet print chiffon.

Among the distinguished guests were Brig. Gen. Raymond F. Metcalfe, chief surgeon at Walter Reed Hospital; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Mrs. George C. Marshall, wife of the newly appointed Chief of Staff; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Maxwell Murray, and Capt. George C. Thomas, of the Naval Hospital and Mrs. Thomas.

After all of almost a thousand guests had been received, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt stepped into an open car and were driven around a large circle of seats to a platform, where they halted to hear the program of the afternoon, given by the Dillard High School Glee Club, from the Dillard Colored High School of Goldsboro, N. C.

Set up under gay marquees here and there over the lawn were refreshment tables where ice cream, cake, sandwiches, coffee and punch were served. Centering each table were large silver bowls, filled with pink roses and pink delphinium. As the party broke up, later in the afternoon, and the buses arrived to take the veterans home, the bouquets on the tables were separated and veterans and nurses were given nosegays to take back with them.

Prominent Women Attend as Gray Ladies

Brightening the landscape, like blossoms in a garden, were the groups of Grey Ladies and the various members of their different orders. Organized at Walter Reed Hospital in 1918 for the express purpose of bringing cheer to the hospitalized and adding those toches of service and comfort which overburdened nurses had not time to give, the Grey Ladies have branches out until their order covers the United States in many capacities.

Noted among the Grey ladies during the afternoon were Mrs. Albert Baggs, chairman of the Grey Lady Service; Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, Mrs. Harry Wardman, Miss Emily Mackall, Miss Helen Clifford, Mrs. Chester Arthur, Mrs. John W. Joyes, Mrs. George Calver, Mrs. John Anderson, Mrs. Cooper Rhodes and Mrs. Tyree Rivers.

There was even a Grey lady there who could speak Chinese. She was Mrs. Raymond Mackay, who was decorated in 1910 and 1911 by the Chinese government for her work in the Central China famine relief. Her father, Dr. John Ferguson organized the Red Cross in China during that time.

Among other noted during the afternoon were Col. and Mrs. John Thomas Taylor, Capt. and Mrs. Howard Ker, Lieut. Roy A. Cano, Lieut. Fletcher Cole and members of the Military and Naval Affairs Committee of Congress.

The Two Former Royal Tours of U. S. Provide a Study in Contrasts

THE FORTHCOMING VISIT to Washington of King George and Queen Elizabeth will be the third pilgrimage to the Capital made by crowned heads of state in the last two decades. Come next October it will be exactly 20 years since residents here bowed and curtsied before King Albert and Queen Elizabeth—the idolized King and Queen of the Belgians—whose journey around the country was followed in 1926 by the triumphal if discordant tour of Queen Marie of Rumania.

What a contrast there was between the two Queens! Elizabeth, simplicity itself, visited art galleries, the Y. W. C. A. and conferences of women doctors (she herself was an M. D.), while Marie, with her 50 trunks, sat on red plush chairs which looked like thrones, and glittered with diamonds when she dined with the Coolidges. She was the first reigning Queen ever to be entertained at a White House state banquet in 150 years of American history. On the Belgian visit to Washington President Wilson was seriously ill, so the royal pair stayed at the home of Breckinridge Long, then Assistant Secretary of State. The monarch later paid a visit to Wilson in his sickroom.

WHEN KING ALBERT and Queen Elizabeth were here, the Woolworth Tower was the highest lookout in New York, and they dutifully climbed to the top of the "skyscraping building." The royal party flew over the city by airplane, passed out some medals, and then went to Boston, where they went to church and ate beans.

Highlight of their tour came when the King took the throttle of his train and ran it en route to Chicago. From there to the West Coast the royal couple kissed babies, visited schools, and promised their audiences that Belgium would pay its war debts.

The party went to West Point, saw a football game, took in the opera, passed out some more medals (including decorations to the train crew, the first ever to carry a king in this country), christened a ship, laid wreaths, and saw the night clubs. In Washington King Albert made speeches in both the House and the Senate, expressing gratitude for American war aid to his homeland.

The Queen showed a passion for sightseeing. She leaned over and peered into the Grand Canyon, had an encounter with a mountain lion at Glacier Point, Calif., and rode the New York subway. She took a swim at Santa Barbara, Calif., in a one-piece bathing suit, then considered a daring outfit, and advocated votes for women, but denied equality of the sexes.

SOUR NOTES ran through Queen Marie's tour from the very beginning. Even while she was en route here on the Leviathan, there were vague mutterings of lawsuits and injunctions arising out of the muddled state of her writing contracts. Later, after she had arrived, the funds of a Queen's benefit performance at the Metropolitan Opera House were attached by a press agent. The Baptists charged that religious persecution was rife in Rumania; a Chicago labor federation protested Marie's visit there; several of her attaches left the royal train in a huff, and a New York policeman complained he lost $75 after taking some champagne while guarding the Queen at a "wild" party in Washington.

Nevertheless, glamour-starved Americans were more than satisfied. Beautiful Queen Marie ran to trailing red velvet gowns and ropes of pearls. She smilingly obliged when photographers yelled "Hey, Queen, look this way," meanwhile wearing the platinum wrist watch they had sent to her aboard the Leviathan before it pulled up to the pier.

THOUGH it had been rumored that the need of money for Rumania or a husband for Princess Ileana might have played a part in the Queen's decision to come here, she told the Bankers Club of New York that she came in search of American love, friendship and understanding, not lonas. Nevertheless, she had officials puzzled as to whether she should pay, as visiting foreigners are obliged to do, an income tax on her American earnings. It was announced that Henry Ford was paying the Queen's incidental costs on her trip, and losing $1,000 per automobile on cars used by Marie on her royal stops. Up to that time 168 cars had been used.

THE TOUR of the British sovereigns to New York and Washington will be far too short to allow for such picturesque features, even were Their Majesties so inclined, which is more than doubtful. But everybody is keenly curious to get at least a glimpse of them, and hopes those responsible for their Washington stay will meet with success in their arrangements.

Note: The latest report anent the garden party at the British Embassy is that a selected group of photographers and newsreel men will be stationed on the embassy roof.

Prince Colonna At Musicale

Prince Ascanio Colonna, Ambassador of Italy, was among the guests last evening at a musicale given by Mr. and Mrs. Fernando Cuniberti in the garden of their Georgetown home.

Everett.

Members of the Italian Embassy staff and of the Dante Alighieri Society were also among the large number of guests who attended the musicale, and the buffet supper following.

Salvatore Mario di Stefano, the celebrated New York harpist, was a feature on the program. He also accompanied Mme. Malda Fani d'Aulby, who sang two groups of songs. For her second song group Mme. d'Aulby was accompanied by Elena Crivella.

At Wardman Park

Mrs Pierce Baldwin, of Hollywood, Calif., accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John D. Stevens, of that place, is at the Wardman Park.

G. W. Fellows Give Dinner

Dr. William Lambert, head of the "fellows," with Mrs. Lambert received the guests at the informal reception in the Madison suite of the hotel which preceded the dinner.

Present were Dr. and Mrs. John R. Cavanagh, Dr. and Mrs. Michael McInerney, Dr. and Mrs. Enoch Fenton, Dr. and Mrs. Stephen Nealon, Dr. and Mrs. Hugh H. Mrs. Ernest Daniel Entertains Art Club

D. C. Federation President Is Hostess to Columbia Heights Group at Annual Luncheon; Mrs. Hibben Assists at Table

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, president of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, entertained the Columbia Heights Art Club at its annual luncheon yesterday at her home on Grant road. Mrs. Daniel is a member of the club.

The guests were served in the dining room from a buffet table at which Mrs. Robert C. Hibben, club president; Mrs. Inez Sheldon Tyler, president of the D. C. Branch of the League of American Pen Women; Mrs. John E. Briggs, vice president, and Mrs. George A. Cooke, director to the federation, assisted. The table centerpiece was of a bouquet of garden flowers.

Following the luncheon, there was a business meeting and a program. Mrs. Hibben presided at the business session and Mrs. R. Bruce Bare was program chairman.

Mrs. Daniel Gives Part of Program

Mrs. Daniel spoke on "Daniel in the Lions Den." She pointed out that the dominion over evil in Daniel's consciousness held the lions at bay and that those who recognized the same source of strength that he did, and courageously held their thought to the good and beautiful, would find that they, too, could overcome enemies when they found themselves figuratively "in the lions' den."

Mrs. Tyler read a poem, "A New Peace," which Mrs. Daniel had written for the recent P. E. O. convention. Her reading it was a surprise to the hostess. Mrs. Hibben read a paper prepared by Mrs. QJoseph McCuen, who was unable to attend. It was on "Swedish Settlements in America," in line with the club's study of Norway and Sweden this year.

Poems Dedicated To Club Members

Mrs. Arthus Seaton, an associate member, read a group of her poems, three of which were dedicated to members of the club who have died in the last year: Mrs. Charles P. Grandfield, Mrs. S. W. Morris and Mrs. J. Edson Briggs, each of whom has a daughter in the club. A fourth poem was dedicated to Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson, who was among the guests and was called on to speak briefly. Mrs. Samuel Swiggett, an associate member, also talked. Mrs. Harry Burnham, of Littleton, N. H., also was a guest.

Other club members present were: Mrs. Dudley S. Bright, Miss Anne Darlington, Miss Mary Embrey, Mrs. H. M. Fohrman, Mrs. Elmer Frazier, Mrs. John W. Frizzell, Mrs. Haleigh Gilchrost, Mrs. Charles K. Hoover, Mrs. A. B. McManus, Mrs. Mary Nalle, Mrs. Georfie Peckham, Mrs. Frederick Y. Pratt, Mrs. Audley L. Smith, Mrs. A. Rogers Tracy, Mrs. M. A. Winter, Mrs. Lou P. Woodruff and Mrs. Berley Winton, who was welcomed into the club yesterday.

Prince Georges Women Hear Girl Scout Head

Edwin P. Coffey, of FBI, Also Speaks To Federation

Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, president of the National Girl Scouts of America, and Edwin P. Coffey of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were speakers yesterday at the spring meeting of the Prince Beorges County Federation of Women's Clubs. The meeting, of which the president, Mrs. Henry Naylor, of Cheverly, was in chargefi was in the Blandensburg High School auditorium.

The Decatur Heights Community Club, which was hostess for the meeting presented Mrs. Naylor with a friendship quilt, on which the names of 500 members of the federation were embroidered. Each club had made a section of it.

Most of the business session was devoted to the revision of by-laws. One of the changes was the elimination of the restriction against the election of any by Princes Georges County residents to federation office.

Following the report of Mrs. Herbert Robey, who represented Mrs. Elmer C. Mayberry, welfare chairman, a fund was taken in a roll call of clubs for the endowment of a hospital bed.

Others reporting were Mrs. J. Earl Keefauver, of Berwyn, chairman of American home; Mrs. Laura Bassett, reporting for Mrs. Frank M. Herndon, of Landover, chairman of American citizenship; Mrs. Carroll Wildman, of Bladensburg, legislation; Mrs. Robert Cook, of Lanham, education; Mrs. B. W. Taylor, of Cottage City, junior membership; Mrs. Nelson G. Tayman, of Cheverly, conservation; Mrs. C. E. James, for Mrs. William G. Breen, of Oxon Hill, on international relations; Mrs. George Speckman, Mount Rainier, on safety.

Turkish Pact Bolsters Peace, Churchill Says

Bulgarian Treaty Should Be Next Goal, Briton Declares

By Winston Churchill

Member of British Parliament and former First Lord of the Admiralty

Wireless and Special Wire to The Post.

London, May 18.—To understand the full significance of the British-Turkish alliance just declared, it is necessary to look back some way. In the autumn of 1911 Italy made an unprovoked attack on the Turkish province of Tripoli, now called Libya. An Italian fleet bombarded the coastal towns and an Italian army established itself on the shore. The young Turks were already in power at Constantinople, and a vigorous resistance was ordered.

Enver Pasha, the hero of the Turkish revolution, went himself through Egypt to Libya in order to conduct the defense of the invaded province. His colleague Djavid wrote to me at the Admiralty offering an alliance with Turkey in return for protection against aggression. The main dangers of the European situation made it impossible for the liberal government of Great Britain to take a hostile line against Italy and thereby make effective her nominal adherence to the Triple Alliance.

Upon this decision the young Turks threw in their lot with Germany, with consequences which profoundly affected the course, though not the result, of the great war.

Turks Blamed Italy

But the attack upon the African possessions of Turkey set in train a series of events which culminated a little later in the combined onslaught of Greece, Serbia and Bulgaria upon what was believed to be the dying Turkish empire. And the young Turks, earnest in their task of national regeneration, ascribed to Italy in some measure the responsibility of the misfortunes that befell them.

Now that the old antagonism of Soviet Russia and Turkey has passed away, Turkish sentiment still regards Italian ambitions as the most direct danger with which she is confronted.

With a foresight which deserved commendation, Neville Chamberlain last year prepared the way by the grant of a $10,000,000 loan to Turkey. This was warmly welcomed by the Turkish nation. The alliance now contracted grew naturally out of mutual assistance and good will.

The relations of Turkey and Greece, like those between Turkey and Soviet Russia, have now become thoroughly harmonious. The historic feuds are now laid to rest.

The consequences of the British-Turkish alliance, which will, no doubt, be swiftly followed by a French-Turkish alliance, can scarcely be overrated. A Nazi newspaper, commenting upon this event, declared that Great Britain had "gained in peace what she could not win for all her efforts in the Great War." This is true, and it may be hoped that the fact will have a sobering influence on the German dictator.

The excellent relations between Turkey and Rumania add to the security of these countries. The contact and communication of the western allies with Soviet Russia through the Dardanelles and the Black Sea has been proved to be a vital need to the defense of eastern Europe in a war against German invasion. The wheat and trade of southern Soviet Russia, as long as British and French sea power rule in the Mediterranean, can flow freely out to the markets of the world, and whatever is necessary in munitions and raw materials of war can be brought in return to the Russian Black Sea ports.

Rumania Their Bulwark

Both Turkey and Soviet Russia have a common interest in the independence and integrity of Rumania. A Nazi advance down the Danube Valley through conquered Austria and intimidated Hungary would carry with it mortal danger to both Turkey and Soviet Russia. Already the Nazis have a powerful growing flotilla on the Danube, and Nazi capture of the mouths of the Danube would be speedily followed by the incursion into the Black Sea of numerous U-boats transported in sections.

Bulgaria Alone

Bulgaria, the unlucky child of the Balkan family, is still adrift from the armed league of the east and from the liberal nations of the west as well as from Soviet Russia, against which she turned in the great war but which fostered and aided her establishment as an independent state.

Bulgaria took one false turn when, after the first Balkan war of 1913, she presumed too much upon the brave services of her army. She took another even more fatal wrong turning when at the end of 1915 King Ferdinand led her into the ranks of the central empires, and cast her fate upon the losing side.

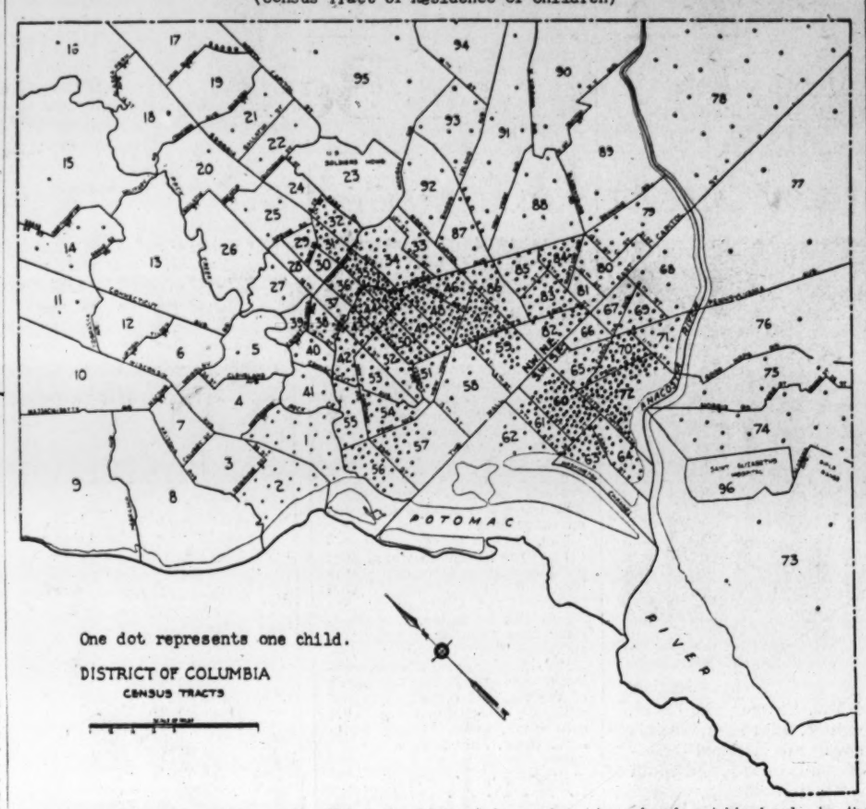
A third opportunity is now open to Bulgaria, and we may be sure that both Rumania and Turkey have the strongest desire for her friendly comradeship. No doubt the scars and wounds of former conflicts have left behind them smarting memories.

It would not be useful, perhaps, to suggest particular measures, but any one can see that the union of Bulgaria with her neighbors would play, perhaps, a decisive part in warding off the course of foreign invasion and internecine war from the so fair lands and brave peoples who have already suffred too long.

Washington: City of Contrasts

Environment Largely Blamed for 840 Child Delinquents; Playgrounds Poorly Located

JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Delinquent Children Committed to Institutions or Placed on Probation During 1937
(Census Tract of Residence of Children)



This is the thirteenth in a series of articles on social and health conditions in the Capital. The fourteenth will appear tomorrow.

By Eugene Pharo.

Having shown the Capital that is seen by housing authorities, doctors, undertakers and policemen, the Washington Council of Social Agencies today unveils one that is seen by the Juvenile Coaurt.

Its pigments are commitments of children less than 17 years old to public institutions or to probation. The finished portrait agrees all too well with others recorded over the last 12 days. But in this case children, instead of infants and adults, pay the price of Washington's staggering contrasts.

Environmental Causes

The environment that affects others, also effects children. But there are additional and special deficiencies that affect them, as provided by a study of the neighborhoods from which came the 840 children, including 210 white and 630 colored, whose troubles are basis for the rash of dots on the accompanying map.

Chief among special causes is the lack of playgrounds and swimming pools. For example, the council states that lack of such facilities in colored neighborhoods in the central city area has a lot to do with the disproportionate number of colored children included in the day's picture.

Almost half of the children whose cases were acted on by the Juvenile Court in 1937 came from 14 census tracts, although only one-fourth of the District's children lived there. In seven of the tracts more than 15 per cent of the dwellings were unfit for use without major repairs. And in addition to dense population and overcrowded dwellings, there was absence of adequate parks and playgrounds.

Playgrounds Poorly Located

"It is true," the council reports, "that Washington has numerous and well-equipped playgrounds and ample park space, but parks and playgrounds are poorly located.

"No matter how well equipped a playground is, if it is not easily accessible—if it is more than half a mile away from home—the child is likely to prefer the street, a nearby vacant lot, or an adjacent alley.

"In the central area, which has a relatively large number of colored juvenile delinquents, there are no public playgrounds and no indoor swimming pools for Negroes, outside of school facilities. The only Negro recreation center in this area, which lacks open space, is the Northwest Settlement House, which has inadequate facilities and can provide for only a very limited number of children."

Ickes in Line To Head New Works Agency

Reportedly Desires To Keep Cabinet Job With Merger Post

Secretary of Interior Ickes yesterday was reported under serious consideration for appointment as Federal Works Administrator, as the Senate Reorganization Committee moved to put the President's first two merger plans into effect July 1.

Ickes' appointment to head the new Federal Works agency may hinge on his willingness to relinquish his present Cabinet post as Interior Secretary to take the new job, it was said in one well-informed Congressional quarter.

Pointing out that he has been PWA Administrator while serving as Secretary of Interior, and for two years was oil administrator as well, his friends were said to be urging that he be named to the new post while continuing in the Cabinet as well.

Ickes Prefers Both

But the new Federal Works Administrator's office was made subject to Senate confirmation, and doubt was expressed that the Senate would confirm him in the works office unless he resigned as Interior Secretary. Ickes is understood to prefer the double assignment. He has received strong backing from labor groups and contractors.

Works Progress Administrator F. C. Harrington previously had been mentioned as most likely to be named head of the new works agency, and a sub-surface tug-of-war between friends of both appeared likely to develop.

The gauge of battle apparently was thrown down yesterday when Ickes asserted at a press conference that his PWA program was the best means of spreading relief and called PWA an "investment" for relief funds.

At a later press conference called by Harrington, the WPA administrator countered PWA claims when he declared that "the cost of a Federally-administered program such as WPA is considerably lower, both in personnel requirements and total expenditures than many local programs receiving grants in aid from the Federal Government."

Meantime, the Senate Reorganization Committee favorably reported a joint resolution sponsored by Chairman Byrnes setting the operation date of both reorganization plans "No. 1" and "No. 2" for July 1.

Plan "No. 1," consolidating works, welfare and lending activities under three independent agencies and centralizing Budget Bureau functions under the White House, normally would take effect June 24. The Byrnes resolution would delay it six days.

Plan "No. 2" regrouping a score of departmental units and abolishing five, ordinarily would take effect July 8. The Byrnes resolution would move this date up more than a week.

Both Byrnes and Representative Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, who will ask House concurrence, explained the change in date was intended to make changes coincide with the start of a new fiscal year.

Baltimore Builder Bids Low on Jail

How to Prevent Moth Damage

The damage done by moths is during the larval stage. When you start housecleaning, clean out all trunks, drawers and closets. Spray all cracks and crevices in closets and clothes containers with Bee Brand Insect Spray, which kills moths in all stages—from egg to adult. Expose all garments to sunlight and before packing away, have them dry cleaned or steam pressed. If clothes hang in closets during the summer, spray regularly with Bee Brand so that a heavy mist descends on garments.

Don't confuse Bee Brand Spray with other insecticides. It has no nasty kerosene smell. Only a clean cedar fragrance that soon disappears. Kills moths, flies, mosquitoes and other flying insects quick, yet entirely safe to use in the home. Don't waste money on cheap, weak, smelly stuff. Insist on genuine Bee Brand Insect Spray. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. 17¢ ½-pt.; 29¢ pt.; 49¢ qt.

NOTE: You can also kill moths, flies, etc., as well as roaches and ants, with Bee Brand Insect Powder. Read directions on can.

Eat your crustles son, or your crispies or sawdusties or whatever health-giving cereal you've been told about, else you won't grow up to be the champion of the world. It doesn't make much difference what sort of a champion you want to be. The good big man has all the edge.

POVICH

It's getting so that the only sport where the little fellow is getting an even break, son, is rifle-shooting. All you have to do there is pull the trigger and let the mechanical monster do the rest. But if you're thinking about baseball, or football or golf, you want to grow up to be a great big man if you want to be champion. The good little men do all right, but they don't get to be champions.

Little Buddy Myer hits a ball on the nose and an outfielder catches it. Big Hank Greenberg hits the ball on the nose—no more accurately than Myer—and poof!—home run. The big guy doesn't even have to hit the ball on the nose. The same swing that would net the little fellow a pop-up, is a home run for the big guys in some parks. The difference isn't skill, it's brawn.

It's the same in football. The 200-pounder has the power, the leg-drive, to stay on his feet and keep charging. It takes a perfect tackle to bring the good big man down. The little fellow may be slippery, but he's a gone goslin when grabbed by a guy with steel in his wrists and weight on his body.

We're getting around to golf, son. Who are the champs? The fellows you hear about. Slammin' Sammy Snead, big Jimmy Thompson, husky Ralph Guldahl, the two-time open champion. Big guys, all of 'em, fellows who can hit the ball a mile and thus have a tremendous edge.

What ever happened to little Paul Runyan, the 120-pounder who, in his tailor-made underwear, had such a stylish swing? Little Runyan, you remember, was running away with tournaments a few years ago. He hasn't won one in a couple of years. And why? It's easy, the big fellows have caught up with him.

Their Long Drives Count

Big fellows like Snead and Guldahl are dominating the golf picture because of their tremendous driving. They've got the rest of the shots, too, but it's their long drives that give 'em the edge. They aren't better shot makers than dozens of other big league pros—they may not be quite as good as Paul Runyan and Bobby Cruicksank and Harry Cooper and Tommy Armour—but they win the tournaments because they grew up to be big men.

We have it straight from Al Houghton, the Washington pro, that that's the reason. At the Congressional Club where he was practicing yesterday for the National Open qualifying, Houghton discoursed at length on the changed picture of golf.

"We can't compete with those big fellows," said Houghton who in his heyday was never more than a 150-pounder. "Back in the days when Hagen and Sarazen and Bobby Jones were tops in golf, they could lick the rest of us because they were the best shot-makers. From tee to green, they were superior. We might match 'em drive for drive, but beyond that they were simply too good.

New Leaders Use Power

"It's different, now. There seems to be a new breed of big fellows in golf. Take Snead and Thompson and Guldahl, and Henry Picard. They overpower the rest of the field. They're good shot-makers all right, but they've got that tremendous driving power, too, and that counts."

Houghton shook his head sadly as if remembering an unpleasantness and then resumed. "If you don't think it counts, let me tell you about the time Henry Picard beat me out for the Hershey Open championship a few years ago. There were four par-five holes on that Hershey course—holes of 460, 470 and up to 500 yards. Four par five holes doesn't sound like many, but listen.

"Whenever you play a 72-hole tournament, going around the course four times, that adds up to 20 par-five holes. And that's where the big fellows have an awful edge. They're sure-shots to be on in two, and how about yourself? Sure, you might get on, but the chances are you are pressing to keep up with 'em. And you know what happens when we press. Well, that's how they lick us. They go along playing well within themselves, and we're out there fighting to keep up."

Lawson Little Is Exception

Pure brawn isn't always an asset, Houghton pointed out. He mentioned Lawson Little, the reformed amateur, who can keep up with Sneed and Guldahl off the tee, perhaps out-drive them. "But Little doesn't have the rest of the shots. Those other big fellows do, that's what counts. They take the heart out of anybody trying to keep up with 'em.

"They don't play better golf, they just play longer golf. They're good golfers who've got power on their side. Talk about Hagen and Jones and Sarazen—why, these brutes who are leading the pro pack today would overpower them, too. Honest."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

St. Louis, May 18.—Over at Northwestern University, in the Sigma Chi Chapter house, they have a good-looking young 180-pound waiter named Bill de Correvont. In the late afternoons he works in the athletic department's equipment room. The job pays him just enough to keep up his tuition and buy his books. This fall, under a new Big Ten Conference rule, he'll get a free meal after every football practice.

CONSIDINE

Between October 1 and Thanksgiving, this year, Bill, the waiter, will be chiefly instrumental in drawing more than a quarter of a million customers to Northwestern football games. If he plays the kind of football the country expects him to play he'll be worth perhaps $1,000,000 to the Wildcats between now and the time they drop off the end of the academy's production line in 1942.

In his senior year at Austin High, when he scored more than 200 points and played before 103,000 spectators in his final game, at Soldier Field, De Correvont was trailed by the longest line of scouts, bribers and wild-eyed alumni ever to afflict a high school hero. He could have turned pro, then and there. He could have gone to any college he wanted. In fact, he could have had a couple of them, just by nodding his head. Instead he picked a Big Ten school, where it is foolhardy to try to violate the screwy laws of collegiate amateurism.

"He Keeps His Feet on the Ground"

No high school football player, and precious few collegiates or pros, ever were dunked into a deeper pile of newspaper clippings, or washed with as many radio waves, as De Correvont. He got sacks of mail and bags of those daffy good-luck charms that people—for some reason—send to athletes who don't need them.

"The best thing I can say about the kid," hefty Lynn Waldorf, the Wildcat coach, told us today, "is that he's kept his feet on the ground. You'd never know the fellow ever had his name in the paper, the way he goes around the campus. The other players like him, too. And that's saying something. You know how they usually ride the boy wonders."

Waldorf has no intention of handing a job in the Wildcat backfield to De Correvont. In fact, even if the fellow does live up to his clippings during the training period, Waldorf will break him in as gradually as any other sophomore back. There won't be much opportunity to let him blossom in a "breather." Northwestern starts out this year with Oklahoma, plays six Big Ten teams in a row, and finishes with a little club named Notre Dame. "I'll have to be pretty careful not to put him in a spot that might hurt his spirit, if he flops. After all," Waldorf said, "Nobody knows how a soph will go in a tough Big Ten game. And that goes for De Correvont, too. The only thing we're sure of is that he's going to make a lot of mistakes. He's bound to."

Far From Finished Player

Waldorf is one of the few coaches who didn't see De Correvont play high school ball. He didn't see too much of him as a freshman this past fall, because after a couple of games it looked as if the kid would flunk his studies, so Waldorf ordered him off the team. The order had a good effect. De Correvont will finish his freshman year with a B minus average which is big casino for a good gridman. Waldorf says the kid is far from a finished player.

"He looks great when he's running toward the sidelines, and he has a swell natural knack of stopping on a dime, and starting off fast again. But he's got a long way to go before he's a good defensive man. We had him practicing his open field tackling and batting down passes during most of the spring season. Had him passing, too. He never did much of that, but it looks like he'll be good at it. He threw a touchdown pass in our final spring game. Averaged about 6 yards on every run, too, but it'll be a lot tougher for him in a real game. But I guess the only thing we've changed about his running is that we've gotten him accustomed to cutting back, where he always used to go straight for an opening and rely on squirming through."

De Correvont chose the relatively Simon-pure Northwestern as his school, instead of a college which would have paid him enough so that his widowed mother wouldn't have to work, because a cousin named Jack Riley urged him. Riley, all-America tackle with the champion 1931 Wildcats, and later a star with the Washington Redskins, convinced Bill to choose Northwestern. The athletic department got him his two meager jobs, and they find this million dollar baby perfectly willing to work for the 10-cent store wage.

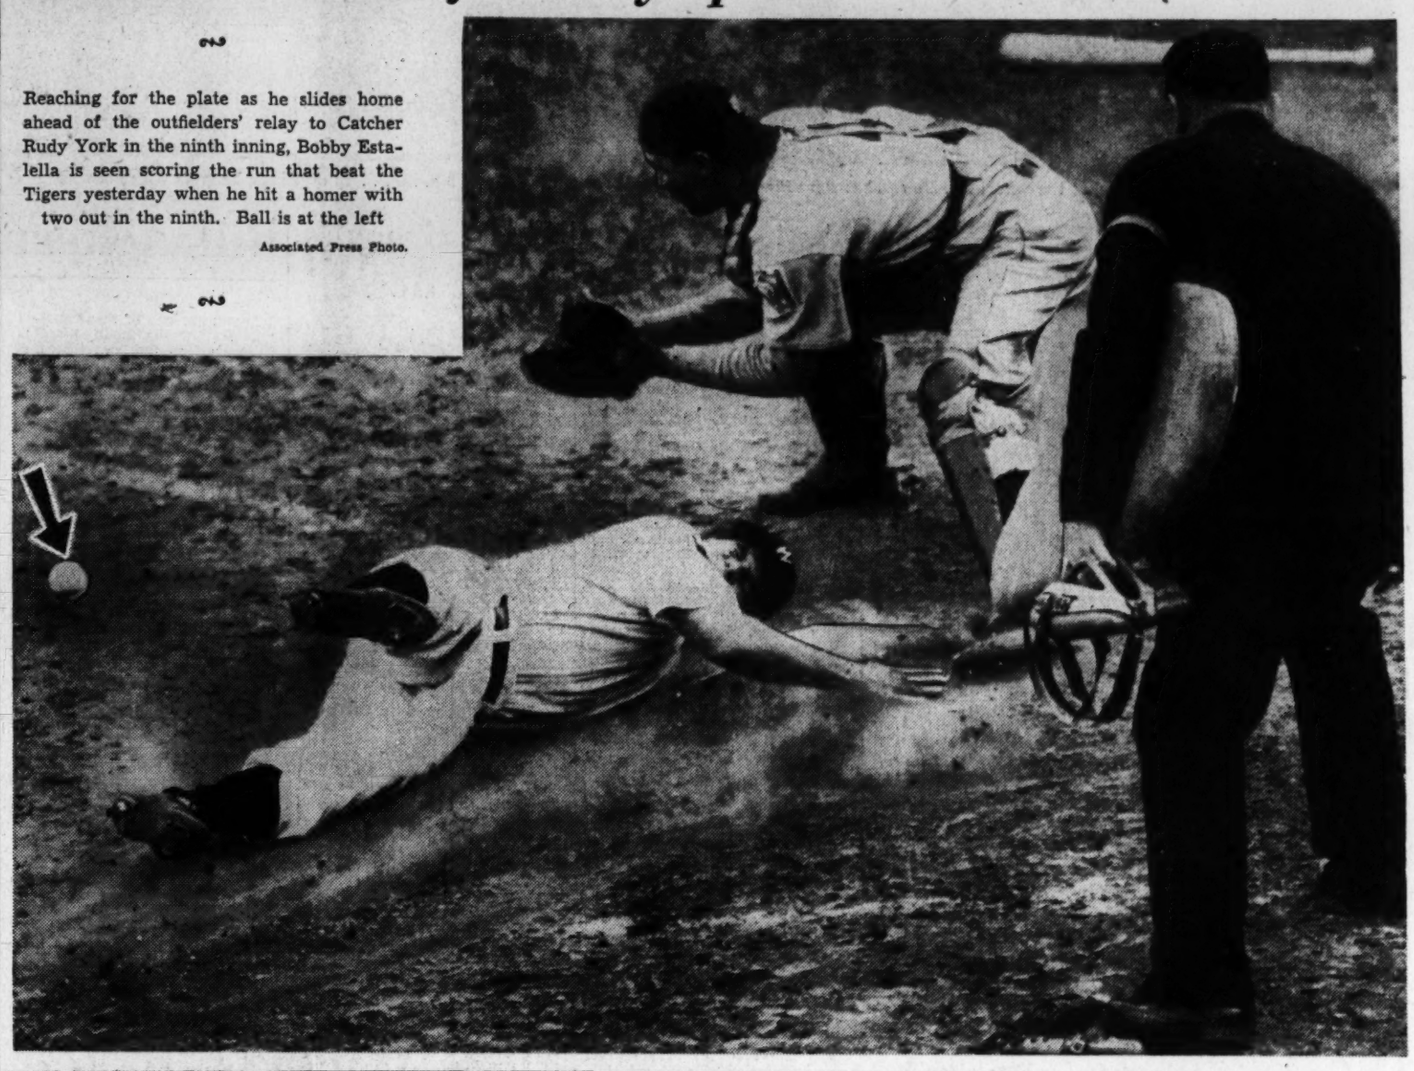
Estalella's Homer in Ninth Beats Detroit, 3-2

Estalella at End of Victory Sprint on Inside-Park Homer



Reaching for the plate as he slides home ahead of the outfielders' relay to Catcher Rudy York in the ninth inning, Bobby Estalella is seen scoring the run that beat the Tigers yesterday when he hit a homer with two out in the ninth. Ball is at the left

Alexandra Gives Tigers Only 4 Hits

Estalella's Blow, Inside Park, Scores Myer; Nats Find McKain Difficult

By Shirley Povich.

In the sort of a setting they always dish up in boys' fiction—you know, the home team trailing by a run in the ninth, two out and a man on base—little Bobby Estalella stood mournfully at the plate yesterday.

Under those circumstances there would have been no joy in Mudville, because Estalella, truth to tell, took with him to the plate a 1939 batting average of only .100. Since the start of the season, the little Cuban had been a dismal batting flop and when he failed to get his bat off his shoulder as the first pitch curved over the plate for a strike there was muttering in the grandstands.

Well, Washington won that ball game yesterday, beat the Tigers, 3 to 2, beat 'em because Estalella caught the next pitch on the broad end of his bat, drove it high against the scoreboard in right centerfield for a dramatic, last-ditch home run that sent Buddy Myer, too, across the plate.

It was no routine home run out of the park, with Estalella scoring at his leisure. The little Cuban had to leg it around the bases, and that he did as Dixie Walker and Barney McCosky gave frantic chase for the ball which hit the fence on the fly and rebounded toward the infield.

Scurrying around the bases on his funny-looking legs, Estalella was given the "green light" by Coach Milan at third and into the plate he literally dove ahead of Charley Gehringer's relay to Catcher Rudy York, groping for the base as he slid, and finding it. Safe, he lay grinning in the dirt until helped to his feet by jubilant teammates.

But before this it should have been mentioned, perhaps, that for the Nats, it was a complete Latin victory. Because Estalella's timely homer had rescued from what appeared to be a cruel defeat his Spanish-speaking colleague, Alex Alexandra. The lanky Venezuelan pitcher was a co-hero out there with Estalella yesterday.

Only four hits did the amazing Alexandra allow the Tigers in a tight pitching duel with Archie McKain, but he appeared doomed to defeat despite his superb performance. Making his second start in the big leagues, the Venezuelan improved even upon his 12-inning stint against the Red Sox last week, but one lapse in the second inning loomed costly.

That was when, after walking Rudy York, he was slugged for a three-bagger by Beau Bell, who scored a bit later on Higgins' infield out. Thereafter the Venezuelan was a potent package and pitched seven innings of runless ball, holding the Tigers to three hits along the rest of the route.

Retires Last 11 in Order

Alexandra was serving up his surprising assortment of fast balls, slow balls and side-arm curves as if to the big leagues born, and literally kept the Nats in the ball game. In the last three innings, with the score 2-1 in favor of the Tigers, the Venezuelan didn't permit a batter to reach base. The last 11 hitters he retired in order.

But it didn't appear that he was to be rewarded for that kind of pitching. Lefthanded Archie McKain, who started for the Tigers, was getting away with—well—with murder. Through the first three inning he held the Nats to four hits, but he was doing it by grace of the spectacular fielding of his colleagues. Pinky Higgins at third base twice speared line drives off the bat of Charlie Gelbert, and Leftfielder Dixie Walker and Centerfielder Barney McCosky were taking turns in robbing Taft Wright of extra-base blows.

But in the fifth the Nats finally came up with a run after Angelo Giuliani singled for their third hit of the game. At that point, Charley

Virginia Horses Win At Atlantic City

Greenhalgh Entry Takes Class for Middle and Heavy Hunters, With Randle Entries Placing Third and Fourth; Sallyport Also Gets a Third

By Anne Hagner

Atlantic City, N. J., May 18.—Virginia horses continued the winning ways that have placed them over Northern stables in many of the hunter events during the third session of the five-day Horse Show in progress at the Auditorium here.

Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh's Springsbury Farm, of Berryville, Va., has scored consistently in the hunter division and today chalked up another notable win in the event for middle and heavyweight hunters with Protest, a 5-year-old bay gelding ridden by Shirley Payne.

Second place went to Morton Smith's Guardsman, from Port Chester, N. Y., but the Virginians came back into the ribbons again for third and fourth, annexed by U. S. Randle's grey gelding, Randle's Dawn, and Bay Randle's Pride II.

Sallyport Places

The Greenhalgh's smooth fencing 4-year-old Sallyport, which won two blues during earlier sessions of the show, continued her successful sweep of the green hunter events when she was pinned first in the class for open hunters, 4-years-old and under, ahead of the Alvin Untermeyer's well liked Illuminator, from Greenwich, Conn. The Untermyer entry was ridden by a Virginian, Charles Lewis.

Sallyport, bred and raised at Springsbury, also placed third in a top field of older horses in the class for thoroughbred hunters, light weight. First place went to Crispin Oglebay's Holystone, second was awarded to Claredda Farm's Woodfellow, and fourth went to another Springsbury entry, Brown Bruin, ridden by Mrs. Billie Jacobs Wetherall.

Cronin's Hit Beats Chisox

Boston, May 18.—Manager Joe Cronin's booming triple with two on base was the deciding factor today when his Boston Red Sox took the odd game from the Chicago White Sox, 5-3. That pilot's mighty blow was struck in the seventh and he tallied his club's final counter after Jim Tabor single.

Yanks Defeat Browns, 8 to 1; 8th in Row

Donald Wins First Start for Champs, Giving Six Hits

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 18.—The Yankee juggernaut rolled over the St. Louis Browns, 8 to 1, today for the champions' eighth straight victory and the Browns' fifth consecutive defeat.

Atley Donald, righthanded rookie, who had a previous victory to his credit in a relief capacity, made his first start for New York and spread six hits, all of them singles except George McQuinn's third homer of the season in the fourth frame.

He was given the customary flawless Yankee support in addition to an early scoring margin, two runs in the first inning, four more in the third and two in the fourth.

Altogether the champions collected ten hits, routing Howard Mills in the third inning for his second loss and continuing their campaign against Bob Harris until he was relieved by Johnny Marcum at the start of the eighth.

The first-inning runs came on Frank Crosetti's single, Red Rolfe's double and a pair of infield outs.

In the fat third chapter Crosetti again opened with a single, stole second, and passes to Tom Henrich and Bill Dickey filled the bases. As his parting act, Mills walked George Selkirk, forcing in a run. Joe Gordon then tripled off Harris for three more.

Snead Heads Local Open Qualifying Field

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Monday's sectional qualifying rounds for the National Open Championship at Congressional took on Nation-wide prominence yesterday when pairings released by the United States Golf Association included Sammy Snead, White Sulphur Spring's leading money winner of 1938, among the field of 48 that will vie for seven places to the Philadelphia play.

Snead, here for a match Sunday at Congrssional that will pit he and Ralph Guldahl against host pro Woffy Cox and Jimmy Thomson, will play his 36-hole test paired with Al Houghton, Georgetown Prep School mentor, starting his first 18 at 9:25 and second round at 1:35.

Snead's playing her was totally unexpected, as he originally announced he would qualify in Philadelphia. The fact that he would be here for the match and had played the coarse influenced the change.

Overwhelming Choice

Snead's appearance virtually reduces the local field to six as "Slammin' Sam" will be an overwhelming choice to gain one of the places, and will be a better than an even bet to lead the field. He is forced to qualify as he finished out of the first 30 and ties in the Open at Denver last year, his poorest performance of the year. In his first Open two years ago, he broke the all-time scoring mark but finished second to Ralph Guldahl.

The field at Congressional is made up of 37 pros and 11 amateurs, with all the local mentors entered, several from Baltimore and Rut Coffey, Winchester; Eddie Koehler, Quan-

Cullenbine Deal Negotiations Off, Says Griffith

Negotiations between the Nats and the Tigers in a deal that would have involved Outfielder Roy Cullenbine have collapsed, Clark Griffith stated yesterday.

"It's all off," said Griffith. "Manager Del Baker of the Tigers communicated with Walter Briggs, the owner of the club, and refused to sanction the deal."

Griffith refused to divulge the name of the Washington play who would have been sent to the Tigers in the trade but Detroit sources said Pitcher Jimmy DeShong had been Griffith's offer.

John Montague, 'Mystery Man,' Seeks to Qualify for Open

By the United Press.

New York, May 18.—John Montague, golf's Paul Bunyan, at last will match strokes with the proven great of the links, it was revealed today.

The man who reputedly has knocked birds from telephone wires with mashies and licked opponents armed only with baseball bat, shovel and rake, was on the list of 1,172 golfers released today by the United States Golf Association fo rMonday's qualifying rounds to determine the field for the Open championship June 8-10 at the Philadelphia Country Club

Montague, on an exhibition tour of the Mid-West, confirmed by telephone that he definitely will play in the Chicago round—one of the 32 spots where "sectionals" will be played Monday.

He's Confident

"I figure I have an excellent chance to qualify," he said. "I didn't pick Chicago because there are 12 places available for 112 of us but because my exhibition schedule works out that way."

"Monty" said he is "hitting them pretty well, but not as good as I used to." He's played only ten rounds since returning this year from the Philippines, where he played in the Philippine Open. Monday will mark Montague's first start in a major competition in this country.

Commissioner Hazen Is Named Starter for Sailing Classic

30 Sailboats Are Expected In Regatta

Eight Trophies Are Donated by Post for Potomac Event on Memorial Day

The ghosts of Sir Thomas Lipton and John Paul Jones probably will have a few words among themselves a week from tomorrow when Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen steps to the rail of the sea-going yawl Ranger to fire a broadside starting blast for some 30 sailboats expected to sail in the 11-mile Gunston Cove classic.

Word that the commissioner would officiate in the long-distance haul down the river reached officials of the Potomac River Sailing Association last night. The local version of blue water racing is being staged by the association in conjunction with The Washington Post. It will be a three-day affair, finishing with a return jaunt up the river Memorial Day.

In keeping with the increasing interest in competitive sailing on the Potomac, The Post has donated eight trophies for winners of the various classes.

Commissioner Hazen will board the Ranger at Alexandria shortly after 1 p. m., May 27. Slower boats in the competition will get under sail at 2 p. m. when a report from a gun in the hands of the Commissioner echoes across the water. The event will be the fifth annual race in the history of the association.

Arrangements completed yesterday by Dr. Albert E. Pagan, regatta chairman, will give the Snipe and Class B Handicap boats a 15-minute start over the Comets and Class A Handicap classes. The 20-foot restricted class, fastest of the local fleet, will follow the latter across the starting line by 15 minutes.

With favorable winds, the entire fleet will cross the finish line, just below Mount Vernon, about 5 p. m. Paul Walter, chairman of the regatta entertainment committee, has scheduled a barbecue which will be held on the shore of Fort Belvoir immediately after the race.

On Sunday skippers will have a full day of competition. A morning race will be staged at 10:30 a. m., followed by a 1:30 p. m. race. The two contests are to be waged on a series basis, trophies going to sailors collecting the highest number of points in their respective classes. In case of a tie, best corrected time registered in the race down the river will be the deciding factor.

Sailboats will lay over in the cove Monday. Memorial Day a starting gun will be fired at noon for the race back up the river which will end off the Old Dominion Boat Club at Alexandria.

Virginia Horses Win in Show

made her first show ring appearance in the same class for lightweight rode her gray Two Leggins to victory in the hunt teams class, came back on the same horse to place second to Charles Lewis on Illuminator in the same class for light weight working hunters. The ever present Sallyport, surprisingly steady for a youngster, placed third.

In the realm of the open jumpers, which have brought down the house each night of the show with genuinely spectacular performances over fences reminiscent of last fall's Inter-American Horse Show, Fort Myer's representatives have been turning in consistent rounds to annex a number of seconds, thirds and fourths. Morton W. (Cap) Smith, mounted on the May Top Stable's Bartender and Golden Brew, so far is the outstanding ribbon winner, but the Fort Myer campaigners are rapidly becoming qualified to take part in the final event of the touch-and-out competition Saturday night, in which all previous winners will compete against each other for the championship.

May Top's rider, after placing his own horses one-two last night, took the mount on Donald Sutherland 3d's Erratic and appropriately named Jitterbug in tonight's touch-and-out, and won the class over Capt. Kenneth Hoge's Broomfield, from Arlington, Va., and Fort Myer's one-eyed Rusty, ridden by Capt. T. J. H. Trapnell.

In the Greatheart jumping class, with four fences set at 5 feet, Margaret Cotter's Rocksie went much more characteristically to tie for fourth place with Crispin Oglebay's chestnut Question. The judges called for a jump-off, and the two horses performed beautifully to tie again with one fault each. In the second jump-off, however, the Oglebay horse made only one-half a fault and Rocksie rubbed two poles lightly, so the award went to Question.

First place went to the indefatigable Cappy Smith, with Bartender, for whom it was the fourth blue ribbon of the show.

The Life of a Racing Driver (?) Meyer, Off Track, Is Just Another Family Man

'California Comet' Is Rated Best Driver of All Time

Meyer Will Seek 4th Victory in Indianapolis Memorial Race; Holds Many, Varied Records

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 18.—Quietly, without ostentation, a man will slip in behind the wheel of a roaring monster within a few days for a dizzy 10-mile whirl around the 2½-mile track in a qualifying spin for the Indianapolis Memorial Day Speedway Classic, and probably more than one spectator will comment softly:

"There, my friend, is the greatest automobile race driver who ever lived."

The driver is Louis Meyer, the "California Comet," and a check of his record indicates such extravagant praise is not far wrong, despite the history of a sport which includes such famed names as Barney Oldfield, Ralphe Palma and the three Chevrolet brothers.

Here are a few reasons why Meyer rates as the head of the class:

He has driven more miles (4,757) over the Indianapolis track than any other man in the 26 years of the event.

He has won three times (1928, 1933 and 1936) and is the only man to accomplish that feat. Tommy Milton, winner in 1921 and 1923 is the only two-time winner.

He has finished more races (seven of the 12 in which he has competed).

He has collected most money ($69,000 from the Speedway and about $50,000 in accessory prizes.

Not Superstitious

Meyer will be starting his thirteenth 500-mile race Memorial Day, but he is not superstitious. He is not a "front runner." He figures in advance what it will take to win, sets his pace accordingly, and when the chips are ahead in the last 100 miles, he pours in gas for a spectacular finish.

Even with such a record, Meyer's chances are about the same as those of a very good golfer in a big field of good players. Other great drivers will be bidding in cars so much improved that the record of 117.20 m. p. h., set by Floyd Roberts last year, appears doomed.

But missing will be three aces of other years, all of whom met death last year in motor crashes. Wild Bill Cummings was killed when his car went off an icy highway at Indianapolis; Chest Gardner was killed in a race at the State Fair at Albany, N. Y., and Billy Winn died in a race at Springfield, Ill.

Free-for-All Marks Londos' WinOverHader

Referee Bortnick Attacked; Police Arrest Spectator

After amusing himself with such things as arm stretches, head locks and body slams, Jim Londos, wrestling's "gentleman of the old school," introduced Jack Hader, Kansas "hate man," to his famed airplane spin last night at Turner's Arena to win handily in 42 minutes.

Londos hoisted the 212-pound Hader to his shoulders, twirled him around and then bounced him firmly upon the canvas. The "hate man" lay expressing little other emotion than resignation.

The Gorgeous Greek, well in his forties, went into the ring to defend his world's championship—one of a number of such titles currently in circulation. Hader gave the champion a rough time early in the match but could not cope with Londos' skill.

Promoter Joe Turner's paying guests were treated to three added attractions—introduction of two of the Washington Nationals' rookies, Walter Masterson ad Joe Haynes, arrest of a spectator, and a final free-for-all fight between Referee Benah Bortnick after the match.

A fan, identified by police as Lee Cannon, 26, of a Rhode Island avenue address, was arrested by Private J. Early Dawn and taken to No. 13 Precinct on a charge of drunk and disorderly. Cannon, who said he was a beautician, was first treated at Freedman's Hospital for scalp lacerations received in the general confusion.

Bortnick, set upon by an irate spectator, paused to swap blows for several minutes before police intervened. Each of these attractions threatened to steal the show from the wrestlers.

Gehringer, of all people, muffed a ball off Alexandra's bat. George Case moved the runners to third and second with a sacrifice and Buddy Lewis ushered a run home with a lengthy fly to McCosky.

The Nats had the tying run on base in the eighth, too, but Buddy Lewis went out stealing, and then McCosky rescued McKain by drifting toward the centerfield wall to haul down Wasdell's long drive.

Refusing to gamble further on McKain despite his four-hit pitching, Manager Del Baker sent left-handed Harry Eisenstat to the mound at the start of the ninth and it was against Eisenstat that the Nats plucked the game out of the ruins.

The ninth inning began in a very misleading manner what with Taft Wright popping out, but against Myer Eisenstat's control deserted him and he walked Myer on four straight balls. There was no cause for immediate alarm in the Tigers' dugout after Gelbert grounded to Higgins for the second out, because Estalella, hitless in his last seven times at bat, was next up.

You know what happened.

Teejays Meet G.W. High Nine On Saturday

Final Home League Game for Presidents, Title Hopes on Line

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, May 18.—George Washington High School baseball team will play its final home game against a Virginia Class A Conference rival here on Saturday afternoon, when it entertains Thomas Jefferson, of Richmond, at 2:30. The Presidents will be seeking their second win over the Teejays, whom they defeated, 18 to 6, in a slugfest at Richmond several weeks ago.

Whether the Jefferson contest can be of any aid to the locals in their State title campaign depends on the outcome of another conference tilt to be played tomorrow between Hopewell High and John Marshall at Richmond. A Hopewell victory will give the Blue Devils undisputed possession of the central district title, but should John Marshall surprise with a victory, the Presidents have a possibility of tying for the championship by winning their three remaining conference games.

Dreadnaught Plays

Swamped by the lopsided score of 33-0 in their first home game against Herndon here last Sunday, the Dreadnaught A. C. will attempt to redeem itself in Tri-County League company here next Sunday, entertaining Vienna at the Municipal Stadium at 2:30. The locals have split even in two league games, and can take second place by winning from the Vienna nine.

Softball Action

Alexandria Softball League teams will see action in four games tomorrow afternoon, with two of the contests scheduled in the Class A section, and the other two in Class B. The Class A tilts pair the Alexandria Dairy and St. Elmo at the Municipal Stadium, and the Virginia Public Service Co. and Herby's Auto Service at Hayden's Field, while in the other games, the Old Dominion Boat Club meets the Open Air Theater ten at the George Mason Field, and the Elks Lodge clashes with the DeMolays on the R. F. & P. diamond.

All games will start at 5:15.

Episcopal High School's tennis team will travel to College Park, Md., tomorrow afternoon, to engage the University of Maryland freshmen.

On Monday the Maroon netmen return to their home courts to meet Gilman Country School, of Baltimore.

Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson,
(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

The two remaining members of the Nats' Latin Legion—Alex Alexandra and Bobby Estalella—draw down all of the ten points awarded today in the Man of the Month contest.

To Alexandra, five points, because he turned in a superlative four-hit pitching job against the Tigers and kept the Nats in the ball game despite their own failure to make more than five hits.

To Estalella, five points, because he literally won the game when it appeared lost, with his ninth-inning home run with a man on base at a time when two were out and the Nats trailing by a run.

Blozis Breaks Discus Record As Mates Win

Equals Shot Mark to Pace Little Hoyas; Baby Terp Nine Wins

Al Blozis, Georgetown's 6-foot 6-inch freshman who is conceded an excellent chance to make the 1940 Olympic team, smashed one Byrd Stadium record, equaled another, and scored 14 points yesterday to lead the Hoya yearlings to an 88-29 victory over Maryland in a track and baseball double-header. The little Terps evened the honors for the day by winning on the diamond, 6 to 1.

Blozis, a beautifully built 235-pound specimen, tossed the 16-pound shotput 49 feet 9 inches to tie the mark established in 1937 by Tony Geniawicz, of Dartmouth. Then he heaved the discus 150 feet 8½ inches to shatter the standard made in 1937 by Maryland's Bill Guckeyson by more than 13 feet.

A teammate, Gregory Koehler, won the javelin with a highly creditable toss of 175 feet, after twice being disqualified for fouling on throws of better than 190 feet.

The two best times in the running events were made by George Tucknott, of Georgetown, who blazed the 220 in 0.22.1 and the 100 in 0.10.2.

Diehl scored ten points for the Hoyas with victories in the 120 high and 220 low hurdles.

Georgetown was never in the running in the baseball game after trying the score at 1-1 in the third inning. Dick McHale provided what proved to be the winning margin for the young Terps when he homered with one on in the fifth.

Masked Marvel Plays

Bill Ackerman

on Fishing

If you are one of those anglers who fish by the moon, there is little need to tell you that this week-end is the time. For those who have taken their fishing indiscriminately, we would point out that among oldtime anglers there is a belief, mounting almost to superstition, that the best fishing of the month comes with the dark of the moon and the first quarter.

ACKERMAN

There is another theory, called by its author, Solunar. Try it out this week-end by noting the time of your best fishing. See if it doesn't come on Saturday from 8:30 to 10:30 and from 2:30 to 4:30. On Sunday the best time should be approximately an hour later. And if you like the idea, the Sport Center will have these tables this week so that you can pick the best time for any day and at any place. We would like personal reports on how it works out.

For stream fishermen, Beaver Creek received a stocking of 500 8 to 10-inch browns, Middle Creek 500, Fishing Creek 1,200, and Hunting Creek, 500. Several Washington anglers have had real sport this week on Fishing Creek. Bill Briggs with still another story of the one that got away—there was no escape for the frogs legs later at Cottie Willard's, however. Regina McKeever with two beautiful 13 inch brookies—but that's all water under the bridge. Try it for yourself. The going should be good.

The stripers are in the Potomac above Capt. Joe Fletcher's. Any number of pan-size fish have been caught, as well as three large ones during the past several days. "Little Joe" Fletcher caught a 6-pounder in the "Parlor," and Bill Ruddiman a 7-pounder in the same place. An oldtimer known only as Tom caugh one a pound less almost at the same time, and several catfish as long as your arm.

There is no reason why the next several weeks won't see some swell fishing in the eddies above Fletcher's, for there is every right to believe that conditions in the Potomac are almost identical with those in the Susquehanna, where, according to Frank Bentz, the striped bass, wall-eyed pike and perch are almost filling Conowingo Pool to overflowing.

For heardhead fishing over the week-end, your favorite place should be just as good a place as any. For stripers, it looks as though Eastern Bay or Solomon's is the best, although some have been taken in the Choptank. Hardly a day this week but what Solomons Islanders have caught big fish in back of Point Patience.

The Boston mackerel that have been laying offshore at Ocean City have moved in under the beach and are taking trolled lures. Crawford Savage's boats have had several nice catches out of the schools. With light tackle these fish are apt to make anyone believe they really have something on the end of their line. This week the catches of seabass and porgies jumped up in numbers until the catches now are almost what you want to make them.

Most every boat at Ocean City is in shape and ready for parties. Capt. Jim Whaley, with his Empries is at Trimpers Docks again, and Capt. Jim Lombard will continue at MaGees Dock instead of moving to the new basin—for which we are glad. And in another few weeks the Southern boats will start moving up.

Don't forget the casting at the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool from 2 until 5 on Saturday. It is very possible that this week the sunshine Bennie Dement promised for last week will be available—with the bicycle riders. Or the barn dance at Walter Johnson's Germantown farm, given by the Maryland Fox Hunters. A hot string band from 9:30 to 1:30, with beer and eats. It is drag or stag—take your choice. On Sunday from 11 to 6 the Brunswick, Maryland Ike Waltons are hosts to the Regional Council at the Willows," just outside of Brunswick.

Hepburn's Car Favored In Races Tomorrow

When the 22 drivers line up for the big car auto race at Frederick, Md., tomorrow afternoon, seven different makes of cars will be represented. The "wagons" will range from the expensive modernized Miller driven by Mark Light, to the homemade job built by Art Hepburn.

Hepburn, son of the chief of police of Prince Georges County, imported his motor from the West Coast and assembled it with the aid of Stover Babcock, his mechanic. Hepburn's McDowell Special is the only one in the East and it is believed to be the fastest car in this section.

Allan's Curling Putt Beats Malone in Chevy Chase Feature

Allan Defeats Grid Star on Final Green; Rippy Wins a Pair Of Close Matches

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Frank (Shanty) Allan, one of the East's better amateur golfers from Pittston, Pa., furnished the dramatics in the Twenty-ninth Annual Chevy Chase Invitation Tournament in yesterday's quarter-final round, dropping an eight-foot putt on the final green to defeat Charlie Malone, pro grid star, before the largest gallery of the day that saw Allan's putt skid completely around the cup, hesitate, and drop in for a 1 up victory.

The tense moment was on the final green when the former Georgetown prep star, finalist in this tournament for the past two years, and Malone, in his first year of tournament golf, but already known as a terrific hitter, approached the last hole all square.

Malone's drive was in a trap, and his second in another to the left of the green. While Allan was short in two. The big Redskin end blasted out of the trap short of the green, chipped within nine feet of the pin and dropped the putt for a five. It made Allan sink to win. The latter stepped up to the ball, it went for the cup, spun around as Allan winced and finally dropped, a par four and the victory.

Joining Allan in the round of four were Claude Rippy, out for a successful defense of his title, Spencer Overton, the methodical medalist from Rolling Road, and Bart Yount, jr., Columbia's 19-year-old newcomer to local tournament play.

Rippy, three down and five to play against Volney Burnett in the morning first round, fired two birdies, took advantage of a three-putt green on the sixteenth and finished with two pars to beat Burnett on the last hole. In the afternoon Rippy was even with E. G. Barnes, clubmate of Overton's at the twelfth, won two holes with pars as Barnes found traps, and protected his advantage for a 2 and 1 triumph.

Yount, the surprise semifinalist, won over Ted Rutley, on the last hole, 2 up, and over Luther Steward, 5 and 3, in the quarter-finals. He was pressed all the way by Rutley, but the Belle Haven entry had a two lapses that cost him the match. Young was within speaking distance of par in both matches.

Overton, medalist with one of the finest 69s in local tournament play, came from one down and six to play to end a match with Ralph Bogart, Army and Navy youngster, with a birdie on the seventeenth, and in the afternoon was five up on J. B. Ryerson, Cooperstown, N. Y., and coasted to a 5 and 3 triumph.

Yount and Allan meet in the upper-bracket semifinal with the Pittston, Pa., ace favored for at least a finalist's berth for the third straight year, while Overton and Rippy will meet in the best match of the year in the other semifinal.

Allan also furnished a morning round thrill by coming from behind to win five holes in a row against John Brawner, host club hope, and take the match 3 and 2. Malone, Luther Steward, Barnes and Ryerson also won morning encounters.

Marion Brown Beaten, 5 and 4, In State Play

Mrs. Sloman Winner In Tourney Upset At Congressional

Marion Brown's hopes for the Maryland State women's title, to add to her District and Middle Atlantic crowns, were left on the fourteenth green of the Congressional Country Club course yesterday as Mrs. Jerome Sloman, of the Suburban Club of Baltimore, defeated the Manor Miss, 5 and 4.

It was the only surprise of the quarter-final round of the nineteenth annual State tournament for the title vacated by Helen Dettweiler when she left the amateur ranks. Mrs. L. G. Pray and Mrs. Leo Walper won by 6 and 5 margins, and Mrs. Betty Meckley, 2 and 1, to gain semifinal berths.

Mrs. Sloman, finalist last year, where she lost to Miss Dettweiler after defeating four District golfers, including Miss Brown, in succession, will attempt to continue her remarkable streak against the local linkswomen tomorrow, meeting Mrs. Pray, while the upper bracket finds Mrs. Meckley, two-time champion, playing Mrs. Walper.

Mrs. Meckley needed a par on the last hole for an 82 in defeating Mrs. Stokes in the closest match of the day, an all Indian Spring battle. They turned all even, but Mrs. Stokes caught traps on 10 and 11 and went two down. They halved through the seventeenth, the winner protecting her two-hole margin.

Mrs. Sloman was up all the way, starting with the first hole, in scoring the upset triumph over the District champion and keeping alive Baltimore's hopes for its first title in five years. She was two up at the ninth, won the eleventh with the aid of a stymie and won the 12th and 14th holes with regulation par threes for the five-hole margin. Miss Brown's putting was off, but she failed to match the consistent play of the visitor from tee to green.

Mrs. Pray, Manor, gained the semifinal berth for the second straight year with a 6 and 5 triumph over Gladys Greiner, Green Spring Valley, in a match that held little doubt after the first few holes.

Mrs. Walper was also up all the way in scoring the 6 and 5 victory over the hero of the first round, Mrs. R. L. Rose, of the host club. Mrs. Walper was out in 43 and three up, and picked up three more holes in the next four to close the match.

Championship Flight

Fred McLeod, Open champion 31 years ago, and Host Mentor Wiffy Cox, also conceded a place by the links dopesters, are the most prominent local entries.

Open for Practice

The course will be open for practice rounds for the local players today, and for the out-of-town entries on Sunday. The Open is scheduled over the Spring Mill course of Ed Dudley's Philadelphia C. C., June 8, 9 and 10.

The U. S. G. A. apparently thought the local amateurs needed professional guidance in the rounds, as the pairings indicate. Robert T. Barnett, Chevy Chase mentor, is playing with W. Carlton Eacho, of the host club; Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam pro, paired with Nate Kaufman, jr., Suburban of Baltimore; Al Jamison, Indian Spring, with Bob Morris, East Potomac; Mel Shorey, East Potomac, with Gene Pittman, of the host club; Leo Walper, another heavy favorite for a place, with Page Hufty, Chevy Chase, and Lewis Worsham, Chevy Chase, with George Miller, Columbia.

Cox is paired with Bill Schreiber, Mount Pleasant mentor and McLeod with Ed Koehler. Andy Gibson, who won the Maryland Open over the same course last year, also drew a simon-pure companion, Jess Dowling, jr.

Davis Subdues Giants for 5th Victory, 6 to 1

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 18.—Curt Davis, the Cardinal's veteran righthander, crimped the New York Giants on seven scattered hits today to give St. Louis the deciding test of their three-game series. The score was 6 to 1.

It was Davis' fifth victory out of seven decisions and he made it look easy, getting into trouble only in the third when a single, an infield out and Alex Kampouris' double scored New York run.

The Cardinals nipped at the offerings of Rookie Manny Salvo until he was forced into retirement in the fourth to be followed in succession by Walter Brown, Jim Lynn and Clydell Castleman.

Bill Jurges' fumble and singles by Enos Slaughter and Mickey Owen sent Don Gutteridge around for the Cardinals' first run in the second inning.

Middie Crew Leaves For Adams Cup Races

Annapolis, May 18.—Under charge of Coach Buck Walsh, the Navy rowing squad, after a short practice this afternoon, left for Cambridge, Mass., where the varsity, junior varsity and plebe crews will take part Saturday in the Adams Cup race, meeting Harvard, Penn and Columbia, the latter a guest entry.

Walsh and his charges regard this race, particularly the meeting with Harvard, the only crew to win from the Navy in the varsity class last years, as a test, indicating whether or not the crew, defeated by Cornell, has benefited by the changed boating sufficiently to have a good chance of defending its championship honors at Poughkeepsie.

Rizzo's Single In 10th Beats Phillies, 5 to 4

Scores Pitcher Tobin With Winning Run For Pittsburgh

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, May 18.—Johnny Rizzo rapped out a long single to centerfield today with the bases loaded to break up a 10-inning pitchers' duel and give Pittsburgh a 5 to 4 victory over Philadelphia.

Jim Tobin, Pirate hurler, allowed the Phils 11 hits while the Bucs got to Al Hollingsworth for 9 bingles.

The Phils banged out two hits in the first of the tenth but were unable to score. Singles by Tobin and Fern Bell and Shortstop George Scharein's fumble of Paul Waner's grounder loaded the bases for the pirates. Rizzo brought in Tobin with the winning tally.

Macks Defeat Tribe on Error

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 18.—Rollie Hemsley's muff of James Shilling's throw to the plate allowed Skeeter Newsome to score the winning run today to give the Athletics a 4-to-3 victory over Cleveland in 11 innings. The triumph ended a Mack streak of five loses.

The bases were filled with one out in the eleventh when Bob Johnson shot a grounder to Shilling. The second baseman made an accurate throw home in time to force Newsome at the plate, but he was safe on the muff.

Cleveland, trailing 2 to 1, scored two runs in the ninth only to have the Mackmen tie it up and send the game into overtime. Hal Trosky hit a homer for the Indians and Johnson one for the Athletics with one on.

A.U. Students Beat Faculty, 13-1, for Softball Crown

American University students yesterday dealt out a humiliating defeat to a faculty softball team to take the "championship" game, 13-1.

Two erudite faculty pitchers were driven from the box by the enthusiastic undergraduates. Dr. W. B. Holton, chemistry professor, retired in the third inning. Staf Cassell, athletic director, pitched the remaining six innings on the campus diamond, but the students continued to score at will.

Gerald MacKeller, pitching for the students, held the faculty to one hit. Dr. E. W. Engel, chemistry professor, hit a single in the second inning and scored. The exuberant student team, with two victories out of three games with the professors, immediately scheduled a "consolation" game with the faculty for tomorrow at 3:30 p. m.

Gabby Clouts Double, Beats Dodgers, 4 to 2

Cub Manager Hits In Sixth With The Bases Loaded

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 18.—Gabby Hartnett, an expert at breaking up ball games, doubled with the bases loaded and two out in the sixth inning today to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 4-to-2 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Hartnett's blow was the second of four hits the Cubs got in their big inning and brought home all three runners. He himself charged home on the next play as Glen Russell singled into leftfield.

Each team obtained seven hits, but Big Bill Lee kept his offerings well scattered to go the route and get his fifth victory against three defeats.

Crack Field Enters Virginia Qualifying

Richmond, May 18 (AP).—A crack field of 28 professionals and amateurs will compete here Monday in a 36-hole qualifying test for three berths allotted the State in the National Open Tournament.

The entry list released today showed 17 simon pures and 11 professionals. The medal event will be played over the difficult James River course of the Country Club of Virginia.

Three players stand out as favorites although a halfdozen more are given a good chance to qualify on the basis of consistent play last season and during the winter.

The top ranking trio includes Bobby Cruickshank, who has twice stood on the threshold of a national title, but failed in final rounds; Chandler Harper, of Portsmouth, State Open champion, and Errie Ball, Farmington Country Club pro at Charlottesville.

Several amateurs are expected to be right in the thick of battle. These include Don O'Brien, young Richmonder who tied for the medal in the State amateur tourney at Hot Springs; Frank Sutton and George D. Morgan, jr., both also of Richmond.

Virginians had to leave the State tto qualify in other sections last yeear, but through the efforts of Fred J. D. Mackay, secretary of hte Virginia Golf Association, Richmond was given a qualifying spot this year.

McCormick, Lombardi Hit for Circuit in Opening Inning

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, May 18.—Ival Goodman's single and successive first-inning homers by Frank McCormick and Ernie Lombardi gave Cincinnati a 3-to-2 victory and the series of three over Boston today.

The Reds' four-hit attack, with a ladies' day crowd of 15,443 in the stands, sent the usually "tough" Danny MacFayden to the showers after two outs. Thereafter, as Johnny Vandermeer spaced six hits, his mates were held to three by Relief Hurler John Lanning.

The Bees got to the young double no-hit star in the second. Hassett's single, Simmons' triple and Lopez' double being good for all the Beantown scores.

Star Mint Takes Early Lead to Win Charles Town Feature

Mon Doit, The Favorite, Takes Place

Trails Winner by 4 Lengths in Feature Purse; 2-Year-Old Equals Spring Record

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., May 18.—The lightweight in a party of six starters, E. K. Hillman's Star Mint took command early and was never headed while winning the Shenandoah Purse, outstanding event on today's program here in the West Virginia Pan-handle.

The 4-year-old daughter of Brandon Mint, came to the imaginary wire four lengths in advance of Mrs. C. M. Feltner's Mon Doit, carrying the hopes of the favorite players. A length and a half farther back was E. A. Roach's Bargain Boy.

Star Mint, getting 13 pounds from Mon Doit, had a scattered backing and paid a $9.60 mutuel. Ter time of 1:46 was only two-fifths off the record for the mile and a sixteenth held by Braw Scott.

Apprentice R. Bernhardt had Star Mint in front after 1 furlong, saved plenty of ground with the filly and she was not seriously menaced. Playmore gave her a tussle at the half pole, but Star Mint drew away. Jockey Lou Machado tried every trick of the saddle art on Mon Doit, but the gelding was not in a catching mood.

The track record for 4 furlongs was equaled in the first race, a sprint for 2-year-olds foaled in West Virginia and Virginia. Wale Signal, full sister of Night Watch and by Prince of Wales, ran the half mile in :48 to match the time of Flosida. The time was taken from the half pole after the juvenile had a running start. Wale Signal was well backed at $5.80.

Two horses paying identical mutuels of $9.20 figured in a $56.40 mutuel in the daily double. Crusand, under Jockey Johnny Shanks' management, won the second race from Fred Almy in a photo finish. In the third race, Red Wings, after delaying the start for 10 minutes and being placed outside the stalls, went to the front and stayed there.

July Cotton Futures Advance 55 Cents a Bale

New York, May 18 (AP).—The July cotton delivery struck a little closer to the 9-cent mark today as offerings were held high and demand persisted. Closing prices up 1 to 11 points, except for May 1940, which was off 3.

Market operations centered on July as brokers found no immediate relief in sight for easing the scarcity of certain grades of the staple for immediate use.

Southern reports indicated the supply situation was becoming more acute every day, which in turn caused additional releases of loan stocks, mostly of the longer staple. The high basis for lint in Southern spot markets held firm but mills were reluctant buyers in view of slim manufacturing profit margins.

Bad Weather In Belts Sends Wheat Higher

Opening Rally Continues to Hold at Close

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 18.—Wheat futures contracts representing the 1939 crop, July and September, staged a strong rally today on reports of unfavorable growing conditions in both the winter and spring wheat belts, wiping out early losses of as much as ⅝ cent and substituting gains of about 1 cent at times.

The rally, which got under way during the first hour, carried these deliveries up to 74⅞ and 74⅛, or about 1-⅞ cents above early lows. Closing prices were ⅝ to ⅞ cent higher than yesterday; July, 74⅛@74¼; September, 74@73⅞.

May wheat fluctuated rapidly over a range of 2⅛ cents, rising as high as 79⅜ and closing at 79@19⅛, or 1 to 1¼ cents higher than yesterday. The tight situation in the old crop contracts showed no signs of being relieved, although cash wheat was quoted ½ cent higher to 1 cent lower, with the basis 1 to 2 cents lower. Premiums for cash wheat have been lowered recently, but contracts involving approximately 5,000,000 bushels remain to be settled before the end of the month. Monday will be the last trading day.

Corn closed unchanged to ¼ cent higher, compared with yesterday; July, 51⅛@52; September, 51⅝. Oats, ¼ to ⅞ cent higher. Rye, 1⅝ to 2 cents higher. Lard unchanged to 5 cents higher.

Baldwin Chairman Fears for Future Of Democracy

Philadelphia, May 18 (AP).—Samuel M. Vauclain, chairman of the board of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, said today "a great weariness" has over come the American people.

"Security is more and more the cry," he told interviewers visiting him on his eighty-third birthday anniversary.

"Few people seek a chance to progress. They look merely for an opportunity to sit back, to shed their duties, in short, to loaf. Democracy cannot be made to run that way. If everyday men and women will not work for themselves and for democracy, it is obvious that another form of government will eventually replace what we have now.

The Market

A Special Correspondent.

Prices Generally Were Unaffected By Heavy Selling of Steel Shares Near the Close; U. S. Bonds Higher

New York, May 18.—Heavy selling of steel shares today failed to upset the balance of the stock market and for what it is worth this fact alone was hailed by the bullish forces as constituting a moral victory. The composite average showed a minor gain of 0.11 point on moderate trading of 418,280 shares and good support was accorded the public utilities, aviation and manufacturing shares.

Government bonds continued their climb to new highs; July cotton went to the highs for the season established last August and wheat futures gained ⅜ to ⅞ cent a bushel.

Steel Selling Explained

It is not difficult to find a reason for the selling of the steels. Last October the steel makers got themselves into a price war and the effect upon their earnings was reflected in the first quarter statements. Now they have done the same thing again, and the cuts appear to have permitted the automobile manufacturers to fill their requirements for months to come at the expense of the steel industry.

Aside from this justification for the selling of steel shares, there was a belief in some quarters that the so-called professional traders started today's pressure against this group on the ground that the market wasn't doing anything in particular and that here was a vulnerable spot. In any event they selected United States Steel for particular attention and of the six lows for the year made by stocks today two of them were steel common and preferred. Respective losses were 1 and 2¾ points. Other members of the group did not fare so poorly, although Bethlehem preferred closed down 1⅜.

List Steady in Morning

The stock list was steady during the morning, but softened early in the afternoon. The drive on steel reached major proportions about 2 o'clock and for about half an hour the situation looked critical.

U. S. Rubber Most Active

United States rubber was the day's most active stock and closed unchanged. Chrysler and Motors added fractions. Telephone and du Pont were up a point each and Harvester 1¼. Sears Roebuck was well liked in the store division and Westinghouse was up nearly a point. Standard of New Jersey eased a good fraction and Ohio Oil developed activity at about its former level. North America was well liked in the utilities, the principal development being the naming of new officers for one of its subsidiaries.

Business News Gloomy

Mid-week business news was not too cheerful. In the case of carloadings, however, there is reason to believe that improvement will be shown by the next report, because of the settlement of the coal strike. The report today, covering the week ended May 13, showed a decrease of 17,461 cars, or 3 per cent, from the preceding week. This drop was more than accounted for by the lowered coal loadings. The period covered was the worst of the coal strike, so this department should show a good increase next week.

Bond Trading Dull

High grade listed bonds showed continued firmness in a dull market today, while more speculative senior securities were irregular. The trend of United States Treasury issues toward ever higher levels was uninterrupted, and some highs appeared also among corporate bonds. In the speculative issues the main tendency was lower, but there were quite a few small advances. Turnover was only $3,-700,000.

Treasury Issues Gain

Net gains of U. S. Treasury bonds in the formal trading ranged from 2-32 to 11-32 point, and 12 issues went to fresh highs for the year.

A late reaction in the counter market offset the movement slightly, but not enough to make much difference. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home corporations were quiet and slightly better, with dealers more than ever intent upon awaiting the terms of the $905,000,-000 refunding.

One of the Telephone 3¼ per cent debenture issues moved to a new high, and best power and light bonds came into better demand. A little inquiry also appeared for best grade rail and industrial issues, apparently from sources that found their portfolios depleted of Commonwealth Edison bonds in the $114,500,000 private placement.

Rail Loans Irregular

Medium-priced railroad bonds were irregular, Southern Pacific bonds advancing, while New York Central bonds declined. The entire section was subject to similar uncertainties. Borderline and default rails also proved uncertain. Rail and utility holding issues sagged, as did most industrial convertibles. The local traction group displayed small gains and losses, while changes in other special groups also were of little consequence.

In the foreign section Australian and Canadian bonds remained in good demand, indicating that our market for such securities is less dependent upon London than most observers had thought probable. Scandinavian and Belgian bonds also were steady. The German and Italian groups were quiet and barely steady. Latin-American default bonds remained dull.

Newman Fails to Purchase Stock of Standard of Neb.

New York, May 18 (AP).—Jerome A. Newman, private Wall Street investor, said today his offer to buy the outstanding shares of stock of Standard Oil of Nebraska had not brought in enough shares to carry out the plan and the offer has automatically expired.

Newman said about 46 per cent of the 161,000 shares of stock outstanding had been deposited under the plan whereas his offer had specified at least 100,000 shares must accept.

The first offer to purchase the Nebraska company's capital stock at $12 a share went out to stockholders on April 17 and was to have expired on May 4. The offer was extended to May 18 because of the slowness of holders in agreeing to the plan but no provision was made to hold the offer open longer.

Newman said today the depository would promptly return the shares deposited by individual holders. He declined to comment further on the failure of holders to agree to his plan to sell their stock to him at $12 a share against the current price of about $7.50 a share on the New York Curb Exchange.

P. C. Johnson, Writer and Poet, Is Dead

Capital Columnist Succumbs at 72 After Long Illness

Philander Chase Johnson, newspaperman, poet and wit, whose pithy words on "Senator Sorghum" and whose lines "cheer up, the worst is yet to come," went around the world, died at 3:05 p. m. yesterday in George Washington University Hospital after a lingering illness. He was 72.

JOHNSON

His column, "Shooting Stars," appeared for many years on the editorial page of The Evening Star, a paper he had worked for through 47 years. Despite ill health in recent years, he continued at his desk almost to his end.

Johnson was born February 6, 1866, in Wheeling, W. Va., a son of Sylvanus E. and Martha A. Mann Johnson. For the most part, he was self-taught, and early took an interest in the newspaper field. Much of his boyhood was spent in Cincinnati, where his father worked on the Enquirer. With his father's assignment to Washington, Johnson came here. He began to write early, finding a field in the Merchant Traveler, Chicago. This opened his way to other publications.

With a leaning toward the theater, he was hired as dramatic critic for the Sunday Capital. Later he worked in a similar field for The Washington Post and the Evening Critic. He joined the staff of the Star July 15, 1891, to write the daily column and contribute otherwise.

His books were titled "Saying of Uncle Eben" and "Senator Sorghum's Primer of Politics." Another was a collection of selected verse, "Now-a-day Poems." He wrote the words to the World War song, "Somewhere in France Is the Lily."

He was married to Mrs. Mary A. Hagman, daughter of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel W. Adams, C. S. A., on April 8, 1908, and resided in the Rockville Pike. He was a member of the Gridiron Club, the National Press Club, was a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of King Solomon, No. 31, Blue Lodge, and of Almas Temple.

Mother Dead, Capt. Luongo Is Sought by Radio

Aided by police of a half dozen States, Washington authorities last night sent half way across the Continent a radio appeal to Capt. Henry L. Luongo, United States Army, to return for his mother's funeral. She died late yesterday.

Capt. Luongo, on leave after a tour of duty in Hawaii before beginning an assignment to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., left here Tuesday on a motor trip as far West as Denver. Washington police asked those of Maryland to relay a message for the Army officer through Delaware to Indiana, Missouri, Colorado and Kansas.

Mrs. Theresa S. Luongo, his mother, was a native of New York and came to Washington in 1931 from Annapolis. Besides Capt. Luongo, she is survived by her husband, Lieut. Frank P. Luongo, United States Navy (retired); two sons, Frank P. Luongo, jr., United States Navy, of Charleston, S. C., and Dr. E. Barker Luongo, of Washington, and three daughters, Mrs. Joseph M. Reilly, miss Constance Luongo, Miss Josephine Luongo and Miss Lucille Luongo, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held Monday at 9 a. m. at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart in Annapolis. Burial will be at Annapolis.

Postlude

By Rav C. B. Brown.

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints presents the Orpheus Club of Salt Lake City in the Washington Chapel Wednesday evening. Director: Albert J. Southwick. Soloists, Robert Sorensen, barytone; Nina Kinghorn, pianist, and Dolores Seal Clark, soprano.

On their way to sing by invitation at the biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Baltimore, 41 members of the Orpheus Club of Salt Lake City tarried in the National Capital to make an appearance last evening in the Washington Chapel under the direction of Albert J. Southwick. They were welcomed by an audience that filled not only the chapel proper, but also the adjoining recreation room, and their concert was received with the appreciative silence befitting a religious edifice.

This group of male singers emits a massed tone of rather heavy quality, for the tenors are outweighed by the barytones and basses. In such technical matters as precision of attack, accuracy of pitch and control of shading, they have been excellently trained, and their singing has an enjoyable zest.

Their numbers, some accompanied by Vera Frey Beason at the piano and D. Sterling Wheelwright at the organ and other sung a cappella, included Dudley Buck's "Bugle Song," Purcell's "Passing By," an "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt, Sibelius' "Broken Melody," Farley's "The Night Wind," Bruno Huhn's "A Meditation," Flagler's "Boots," and two works by Utah composers: "Beneath a Southern Sky" by Gladys Rich and a setting of the Lord's Prayer by B. Cecil Gates.

Nina Kinghorn, a pianist who will represent the National Parks District in the Federation contest for young artists, contributed the Beethoven rondo known as "The Rage Over a Lost Penny" and Liszt's "Rigoletto" paraphrase. Robert Sorenson, barytone, was heard in "Water Boy" and Oley Speaks' "Morning," and Dolores Seal Clark, soprano, offered Teresa del Riego's "Homing" and Rogers' "The Star."

Norman Freuenheim plays a piano recital Wednesday evening in the Raleigh Hotel ballroom. Program: Variations in F minor (Haydn), Hornpipe (Purcell), "Le Coucou" (Daquin), Gavotte (Gluck-Brahms), Intermezzo in B flat minor (Brahms), "Carnaval" (Schumann), Nocturnes in C minor and F major, Mazurek in F sharp minor (Chopin), "Le vent dans la plaine," "La danse de Puck," "La Terrasse des audiences du clair de lune" and "L'isle joyeuse" (Debussy).

Norman Frauenheim, who has been artistically active for several months both at home and on tour, gave his final piano recital of the season last evening in the ballroom of the Raleigh Hotel. My arrival coincided with his attack upon the preambule of Schumann's "Carnaval" and I settled myself for the enjoyment of a contagiously spirited reading of that delightful work, which is an epitome of the whole period of self-conscious romanticism.

Each of us has his own ideas about the interpretation of "Carnaval," and I found myself disagreeing now and then over certain details of tempo, phrasing and dynamics, but Mr. Frauenheim's fervor and poetic insight were so disarming that I could not hold out against him. He was completely in the vein for exposition; and the episodes were related with a persuasive eloquence. As an extra number he added "Vogel als Prophet," one of Schumann's finest lyric inspirations.

The latter half of the program was devoted to those two poets of the piano, Chopin and Debussy, for both of whom Mr. Frauenheim has an obvious affection.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press.

London, May 18.—Demand for British government bonds again buoyed the stock market today. Transatlantics, reversing the recent trend, moved forward. A lift in tobacco stocks featured the industrial division. European bonds were strong, especially Danzig 8s. Most commodity shares and domestic rails drifted at unchanged levels, although a little support appeared for some golds.

Paris.—Markets were closed in observance of Ascension Day.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures closed 1 to 9 points lower today when near month liquidation and hedge selling met only limited support. Wheat futures ended unchanged to ¼ penny up. Improved cables tended to offset favorable United States crop and weather reports.

Postlude

By Rav C. B. Brown.

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints presents the Orpheus Club of Salt Lake City in the Washington Chapel Wednesday evening. Director: Albert J. Southwick. Soloists, Robert Sorensen, barytone; Nina Kinghorn, pianist, and Dolores Seal Clark, soprano.

On their way to sing by invitation at the biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Baltimore, 41 members of the Orpheus Club of Salt Lake City tarried in the National Capital to make an appearance last evening in the Washington Chapel under the direction of Albert J. Southwick. They were welcomed by an audience that filled not only the chapel proper, but also the adjoining recreation room, and their concert was received with the appreciative silence befitting a religious edifice.

This group of male singers emits a massed tone of rather heavy quality, for the tenors are outweighed by the barytones and basses. In such technical matters as precision of attack, accuracy of pitch and control of shading, they have been excellently trained, and their singing has an enjoyable zest.

Their numbers, some accompanied by Vera Frey Beason at the piano and D. Sterling Wheelwright at the organ and other sung a cappella, included Dudley Buck's "Bugle Song," Purcell's "Passing By," an "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt, Sibelius' "Broken Melody," Farley's "The Night Wind," Bruno Huhn's "A Meditation," Flagler's "Boots," and two works by Utah composers: "Beneath a Southern Sky" by Gladys Rich and a setting of the Lord's Prayer by B. Cecil Gates.

Nina Kinghorn, a pianist who will represent the National Parks District in the Federation contest for young artists, contributed the Beethoven rondo known as "The Rage Over a Lost Penny" and Liszt's "Rigoletto" paraphrase. Robert Sorenson, barytone, was heard in "Water Boy" and Oley Speaks' "Morning," and Dolores Seal Clark, soprano, offered Teresa del Riego's "Homing" and Rogers' "The Star."

Norman Freuenheim plays a piano recital Wednesday evening in the Raleigh Hotel ballroom. Program: Variations in F minor (Haydn), Hornpipe (Purcell), "Le Coucou" (Daquin), Gavotte (Gluck-Brahms), Intermezzo in B flat minor (Brahms), "Carnaval" (Schumann), Nocturnes in C minor and F major, Mazurek in F sharp minor (Chopin), "Le vent dans la plaine," "La danse de Puck," "La Terrasse des audiences du clair de lune" and "L'isle joyeuse" (Debussy).

Norman Frauenheim, who has been artistically active for several months both at home and on tour, gave his final piano recital of the season last evening in the ballroom of the Raleigh Hotel. My arrival coincided with his attack upon the preambule of Schumann's "Carnaval" and I settled myself for the enjoyment of a contagiously spirited reading of that delightful work, which is an epitome of the whole period of self-conscious romanticism.

Each of us has his own ideas about the interpretation of "Carnaval," and I found myself disagreeing now and then over certain details of tempo, phrasing and dynamics, but Mr. Frauenheim's fervor and poetic insight were so disarming that I could not hold out against him. He was completely in the vein for exposition; and the episodes were related with a persuasive eloquence. As an extra number he added "Vogel als Prophet," one of Schumann's finest lyric inspirations.

The latter half of the program was devoted to those two poets of the piano, Chopin and Debussy, for both of whom Mr. Frauenheim has an obvious affection.

Contract Bridge

By R. F. Foster.

Bridge players who follow the Culbertson system will be interested in this test prepared by the National Studios, called "What Do You Know?" Those who have their own ideas or who play other systems may be interested in seing how their bids check up with Culbertson's.

1. With neither side vulnerable, the bidding has gone:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	?

On each of these hands you are South. What do you bid?

a. ♠ Q 10 7 5 2 ♡ 6 4 3 ◇ 8 5 2 ♣ 8 6 3

b. ♠ K 10 7 5 2 ♡ J 6 4 ◇ 5 2 ♣ J 6 3

c. ♠ Q J 8 4 ♡ J 7 ◇ Q 10 9 2 ♣ J 10 3

d. ♠ 10 6 3 ♡ Q 8 4 ◇ A 10 7 4 2 ♣ 9 5

Deciding on a Penalty

2. The bidding has gone:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

♠ Q J 8
♡ A K 9 7
♣ A Q J 6 3

Your Rights

As declarer, the law allows you an option of these two penalties: Declarer may either treat the card led out of turn as a penalty card, in which case the offender must play it at his next legal opportunity, or require the lead of a specified suit, from the correct leader.

A Question of Play

3. You are West, declarer at four spades. With no adverse bidding, North leads the heart king. How do you plan to play the hand?

West	East
♠ A K 9 6 3	♠ 8 5 4
♡ A 4 2	♡ 8 5 3
◇ J 10 8	◇ A Q 9 7 6

Answers to Quiz

1. (a) Pass. You have a five-card major suit, but your hand is very balanced and your partner should do about as well at no trump as you would do at spades. The chief danger of bidding with this hand is that your partner might go on. With so weak a holding, you are anxious to get out as cheaply as possible.

1. (b) Two spades. If your partner has an average no-trump bid, he will pass and you should do about as well at spades as he would do at no trump. If he has a maximum no trump, there is a reasonable prospect of game in the combined hands.

1. (c) Two no trump. Normally, you should have one-plus honor-trick in three suits to raise to two no trump. In this case, you have the merest trifle less than one-plus honor-trick, but you have seven honor cards and some strength in each of the four suits. You are therefore entitled to stretch a point.

1. (d) Two no trump. You have only one-plus honor-trick in two suits, whereas one and one-half honor-tricks are usually required for such a raise. The fact that you have a five-card suit and some prospect of a side entry induces you to stretch the point.

2. Tell West to lead a heart. Naturally, you have no reason to treat the diamond king as a penalty card. The only question is which suit do you want West to lead? It is most unlikely that you can gain a trick by a spade lead, and even a free finesse in clubs would do you little good. Furthermore, there is a chance that calling for a club lead may disclose a void in West's hand, with disastrous results. The trump lead gives you instant control and may save you a trick in that suit.

3. You should hold up the ace of hearts and take the second heart trick. Now you draw the ace and king of trumps and take the diamond finesse. If the finesse loses, your only hope is that South has no hearts left. You are bound to lose a trump and cannot afford to lose a diamond and two tricks in hearts.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Letter to the Diary

"The House Civil Service Committee reports that the measure which would amend the military preference act and demoralize the active military forces is 'pending;' no action.

"In this connection, it may be interesting to note that of 261,068 persons examined by the Civil Service Commission from July 1, 1931, to June 30, 1932, there were 62,326 military preference claims filed. For the period, July 1, 1937 to June 30, 1938, 408,928 persons were examined, and for the same period 79,129 military claims were filed. Since August 15, 1876, the military preference laws for the benefit of honorably discharged veterans have been on the books. With other countries 'looking up' to the military forces, the United States through H. R. 5101 smacks the regular right on the nose. Many now think that it is proper for the measure to die a natural death. (Signed) Harry G. Ritner, publicity director, Gen. Malin Craig Post, No. 20, Regular Veterans Association."

With the expanding work on Navy Department Personnel Director Piozet, it may be necessary for him to enlarge his staff. In any event, his office will be moved farther up the hall to more spacious accomodations.

The United Federal Workers of America, Local 2, Agriculture Department, goes on record, by resolution, in favor of the Randolph amendments to the District unemployment compensation law. An interesting point in the amendment is that part calling for extension of civil service to employes of the Unemployment Compensation Board, allowing present employes to take non-competitive examinations to retain their jobs.

Some of the members of Congress have said they do not need additional clerical help, but others are equally as emphatic in saying they do—a split that makes interesting the vote of the House for more clerical help for Congressmen. The issue, on the Senate side, may be enlivened. It has been said that some Government patronage gals go off afternoons to their Congressmen's offices and help them when the work piles up.

The first moonlight boat ride jamboree given by Government Printing Office Post, No. 33, American Legion, will be held tomorrow night onthe Wilson Line steamer, City of Washington. The boat leaves the wharf at 8:30 p. m. There will be beer and dancing.

Another outing: A moonlight dance-cruise will be sponsored by Washington Chapter, Society for the Advancement of Management and the Society for Personnel Administration on Thursday, June 1. The steamer Potomac will be used. A swing orchestra, beer and games will be featured. "Why not join these societies in closing the 1939-40 season with a 'crow's nest' view of the winter program, and have an outing of fun and entertainment at the same time," says the announcement. The boat leaves the Seventh and Maine wharf at 8:45 p. m.

William E. Mosher, dean, Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University, will speak on "Public Administration on the March" before the Society for Personnel Administration at a dinner-meeting to be held at 6:30 p. m. Monday evening at Child's Gingham Club, 1423 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. The annual business meeting will follow the speech.

Officers have been elected by the District of Columbia Federation of Federal Employe Unions (N. F. F. E.), as follows: Joseph Stansfield, president; W. E. Hoffheins, vice president; Grace E. Reardon, secretary-treasurer, and Joseph Harry, trustee. Stansfield also was elected as a delegate to the national convention of the N. F. F. E. to be held in San Francisco in September. Hoffheins was chosen as alternate delegate.

The Federal Transportation Association leaves for a tour of the World's Fair in New York, today.

Dr. W. W. Stockberger, special adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture, pens a pertinent paragraph in this week's issue of the Agriculture Exchange: "These are difficult and dangerous times, reminiscent of 20 years ago. Many of us bear the name of ancestors who fled from intolerable oppression in a foreign land and found a haven of freedom in the American Colonies. They became industrious, peaceful and law-abiding citizens. Many served with honor under the flag of their adopted country. Yet, during the unreasoning hysteria of 20 years ago, their descendants were suspected of disloyalty to the land of their birth. Surely we are wiser now than we were then, less ready to permit hatred and prejudice to control our thoughts and feelings."

Bob Burns Says—

There ain't anybody in the world as full of the true sportin' spirit as us Americans. After a prize fight, the loser always congratulates the winner. And after a baseball game the folks in the grandstand always cheer the losing team . . . before throwing pop bottles at the umpire.

I'll never forget the sincere smile of happiness on my Uncle Slug's face when his wife stopped a woman on the street and gave her a big kiss. Afterward, Uncle Slug said, "Honey, that was mighty sporting of you. I thought that woman had been your worst enemy for ten years. I'm glad to see y'all don't hate each other no more."

She said, "No? Well, that's why I kissed her. When she left did you see that big freckle on her nose where I kissed the powder off?"

Secrets in Love

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

New characters:

Thalia Polk—Senator's daughter who seeks the love of Hewitt Gill.

Nadeja Damara—Exotic woman, who is a mystery in Washington.

Joan Covington—Anthony's sister who has fled her New York school and crashed the embassy reception.

Perturbed at what she had gone through at the embassy reception, Peg, Anthony and Joan decide to walk to Peg's Georgetown home. Duncan and Nadeja have disappeared. Anthony tells Peg that Nadeja is a mystery woman of Washington. After dropping Joan at her hotel, Peg and Anthony go for a monolight stroll—and soon Peg finds herself in Anthony's arms and thoroughly kissed.

CHAPTER XII

THERE was night school to keep Peg busy that week, too, and several evenings spent in Maizie Darton's apartment. Maizie had left Mr. Nelson's employment now, she was far too obviously expectant to keep on with her work. Peg found her depressed and a little morbid one night when she climbed the three shabby flights of stairs to a top-floor flat in a drab house on P street. Depressed about her husband being out of a job and a baby coming into all this uncertainty.

She took Peg's coat, folded it carefully, muffler inside. Maizie mothered everything instinctively, even coats. Peg, hurrying into the kitchen with the things she had brought to refill the depleted pantry . . . canned goods, fresh fruits and vegetables, staples . . . felt the quick, hard wrench of her heart. In moments like this it seemed that she, Peg, had such a full, beautiful life; a life that included Hewitt and security and the promise of a golden future. And Maizie had so little, so pathetically little.

Maizie had wanted to know later, as Peg scraped the supper dishes, "I wonder, Peg, if it's so awful . . . having a baby. Sometimes I walk by the hospital and stand there looking up at the windows, thinking about the women who lie beyond them. Some of them are happy."

Waiting

She touched her blonde hair with a nervous gesture, her face desolate and contorted. "Honest, Peg, if Don doesn't get a job soon, I don't know what's going to happen to us. He tries. He'd take just about anything. Even odd jobs like he's on tonight. Imagine a university graduate washing dishes in a Ninth street joint!"

Peg said, swiftly: "You've got everything to live for, Maizie. You mustn't think anything else, ever. Being morbid isn't good for you, it's bad for the baby and I won't have it. Look here, get into your things. We'll skip out. And put on some low heels. We'll walk. That'll be good for both of you. Come on, let's get out of here."

They were on the street, waiting for the traffic light at the corner. Peg didn't see a taxi that drew up near them. She didn't know that Anthony Covington was on the back seat until he shouted to her above the roar of waiting traffic: "Can I give you gals a lift?"

Maizie took a step toward the car, but Peg touched her elbow. "We're walking for our health, Anthony. Thanks just the same."

She was, she suddenly discovered, smiling. At the sight of Anthony, all her unease had been forgotten, everything forgotten except that he was there, that he had smiled, that nothing in a morbid world seemed to matter when Anthony Covington smiled.

When Anthony had gone on, Maizie looked into Peg's eyes. "Well, what was back of that, Peg? He's a mighty nice-looking gent." And when Peg didn't answer, Maizie said: "Why didn't we ride with him, Peg? After all, we walked a long way. We could have ridden back!"

Peg said: "I don't know, Maizie." It was the truth. She had wanted to climb into that taxi beside Anthony. But somehow Anthony confused her. She didn't want to see him again until she had her mind all straightened out about him.

What Happened on the Bridge

All that week she had kept going over and over in her mind what had happened on Buffalo bridge. It wasn't right that Anthony's kiss could stir her as it had. It was a little puzzling to find her mind going back so often to the feel of his arms around her, to the way he had stood afterward looking down at her. He had reached up impulsively and had run his finger along the line of her nose. He had said in an unsteady voice: "Well, what are we going to do about it, Peg?"

She hadn't answered. She had been thinking widly: "Why, I let him kiss me. I did—I did! I made no effort to stop him." And when she remained silent, Anthony had gone on: "I think I know, Peg. I think we're going to get married, darling."

No; it was all wrong that Anthony could stir her as he had. That even his voice could make her heart hammer and her knees go weak beneath her. And she couldn't understand why she had clung to him as she had. Perhaps she wasn't really a nice girl at all; perhaps she had a wanton streak in her somewhere.

Anthony had said: "Peg—we click. You knew it when I kissed you. You can't deny that." And she had said, with a sophistication far from real: "Anthony, don't be absurd. A girl can let a man kiss her without it meaning very much. Without it meaning anything, really."

He had said, fiercely: "But not you, Peg."

And she had said, in a small, intense voice: "Yes, me, Anthony. I let you kiss me, and I—I liked it; but it didn't mean a thing."

And that, decided Peg, walking along with Maizie, just about summed it up. Anthony was an extremely attractive young man. She had let him kiss her. She had liked it. But it didn't mean a thing.

Hewitt Coming Back

Peg had a little calendar on her desk, and all that week she had marked off in blue crayon the days Hewitt had been away. She marked off Thursday now and looked with shining eyes on Friday, which was untouched with her pencil. Friday, she thought, excitedly, Hewitt would be back today. Probably before noon. Every now and then she would look up at the clock, her heart racing. It was hard to do any work when she was so excited. But somehow she checked the ticker-tape figures, made the list that Mr. Nelson was waiting for and took it in to him.

Mr. Nelson was sitting back in his chair, his shoulders hunched up in a characteristic pose and his small blue eyes glaring at her. He said, gruffly:

"You like working alongside Hewitt Gill, don't you, Peg?"

Peg swallowed hard. She said, cautiously: "Not particularly. Why, Mr. Nelson?"

The old man suddenly grinned at her. He said: "Pretty foxy, aren't you, miss? Well, I may be in my dotage. I may even be senile, as most bachelors are. But I've got a pair of eyes. Pretty shrewd ones, too. You're keen about me giving Hewitt that partnership. You've done a lot of talking, a lot of calling my attention to things that wouldn't have escaped me in the first place. You've been very clever, Peg; but not clever enough. Well, I've decided that I don't approve of this eternal blat about young men running things, and old men stepping aside to make room for 'em. That's what's wrong with this world today, if you ask me."

Peg looked at her godfather with a perfectly straight little face, but amused eyes. When he was in one of these moods he usually called Hewitt into his office. He would keep him closeted there with him for hours. Hewitt would emerge, looking taut and disturbed and very pale, and the old man would fairly strut with the delights of bullying. And now, having discovered that Hewitt meant something more to her than an employer, he was teasing her and reveling in it.

"Well, what are you standing there looking like that for?" Mr. Nelson finally blazed at her. "Haven't you got any of your daddy's get-up-and get? Haven't you got anything to say at all?"

An Old Tyrant

Peg grinned. "Nothing—except that you're a tyrant and that if I wasn't working for you I'd come over there and pull your hair, like I used to do." And then she said: "You know you're going to give Mr. Gill that partnership. Why don't you go ahead and do it. Why do you keep him out on a limb like that?"

Mr. Nelson narrowed his eyes to slits. "If I thought there would be a double result in my doing it I might be tempted, young lady."

Peg's heart leaped. Coins of color blazed in her cheeks. "Why don't you try it and see what happens," she said, excitedly. Now she thought: "Hewitt was all wrong about trying to hide how we feel from Mr. Nelson. If he had known he would have done something about that partnership long before this."

"There!" said Mr. Nelson, delightedly. "I knew where there was so much smoke there must be a little fire, anyway. Darn it all, it's a conflagration, isn't it?"

"Burning me right down to the ground," said Peg. And fled.

She was more anxious than ever for Hewitt to come back to the office now. When she told him what Mr. Nelson had said he would be out of his solemn young head with joy. She glanced swiftly at the wall clock again and saw that it was almost noon now. Hewitt would be here any minute. She reached in her desk and got her purse and started down the hall toward the restroom. It wouldn't do to see Hewitt after a week's absence with her nose shiny and her hair this way and that. But as she passed the stairway shaft she stopped abruptly. She heard Hewitt's quick, contagious laugh, and without a moment's hesitation opened the door.

Seen in the Shadows

She just stood there then. Looking at Hewitt. Looking at Thalia Polk. They didn't see Peg. They were standing close together on the stairs, on those dimly lit, shadowy stairs. Hewitt laughed again, and he said: "Thalia, darling . . ." in a voice that drifted into a whisper. And with Peg still watching, too rooted in the agony of disillusionment to move, she saw Hewitt take Thalia Polk in his arms. Saw him kiss her with a practiced familiarity. Not as Anthony had kissed her, Peg . . . a sudden, impulsive kiss, a very first kiss. Nor did Thalia stand back from Hewitt, amazed and a little embarrassed Thalia clung to him with that same practiced familiarity. This wasn't a first kiss between these two. This was one of many kisses . . . many recent kisses.

Peg closed the door then noiselessly. She leaned against it for a moment, trembling. In that moment she seemed to know what it must be like to die, to feel life oozing from the heart. She turned, then, went straight back to her office, to her desk and sat down weakly. She didn't touch the work before her. She didn't move at all. She just sat there, looking blankly at nothing. For so long now her mind had run in a straight and narrow channel, and at the end of that groove, like sunlight, had been the vision of Hewitt. Now it was all blasted.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.
